Now, this week, we've essentially changed the name of the Comprehensive Albums chart to, you guessed it: the Billboard 200. And, what was the old Billboard 200 will now be called Top Current Albums. We will still compile the Top Pop Catalog chart and continue to employ our rules regarding when an album reaches catalog status.

Do note that none of these changes will alter Nielsen SoundScan's calculations of its marketing reports. Additionally, the Billboard 200 is our only currents-based chart that will be changed by the reintroduction of catalog albums. All of our other currents-based albums charts will still abide by our catalog rules. Those include Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, Top Country Albums and so forth.

Now, for the fine details: Any album that had previously been on the Billboard 200 and then since fell to catalog status, but returns to the big chart this week, is designated as a "re-entry."

In the "weeks on chart" column, the number reflects the total number of weeks the album has spent specifically on the Billboard 200.

In the "peak position" column, the number indicates where the album peaked on the Billboard 200—not on either Top Pop Catalog or Top Comprehensive Albums. (Thus, Michael Jackson's "Number Ones" retains its peak of No. 13, its Billboard 200 high that it reached Dec. 6, 2003, though the album did climb to No. 1 on both the Catalog and Comprehensive charts earlier this year.)

You'll notice that some albums are artificially pushed down the tally, despite their sales gains, partially because of the influx of catalog titles. Thus, an album like Cage the Elephant's self-titled set receives a bullet rewarding its 26% gain in sales, despite its chart slippage (moving 109-123).

For any questions regarding these changes, please contact either director of charts Silvio Pietroluongo (silvio@billboard.com) or myself, Billboard 200 chart manager Keith Caulfield (kcaulfield@billboard.com).

FOLK EXPLOSION: This week, Billboard adds Top Folk Albums (see page 36) to its ever-growing menu of music charts (nearly 200 of them).

The 15-position inaugural list includes recent albums by the Swell Season and Bob Dylan and will feature traditional folk artists in addition to appropriate titles by acoustic-based singer/songwriters. The tally, which is managed by Gary Trust, will run periodically in print and appear weekly on Billboard.biz and Billboard.com. Trust can be reached at gtrust@billboard.com.

Titles that stay in the top half of the Billboard 200 or never remain as current. Titles older than 18 months are catalog. Deep catalog is a subset of catalog for titles out more than 36 months.

Her fourth studio set arrives with 180,000 copies and follows three straight chart-toppers. Last week, Jones chatted on NPR's "Morning Edition" on street date and Comedy Central's "The Colbert Report" the next day.

The "American Idol" [illegible] 21st contestant from the show to notch a top 20 album on the chart. Meanwhile, 2009 runner-up Adam Lambert debuts at No. 72 with a set of pre-"Idol" recordings. His proper debut arrives next week.

15

This album (56,000) is the highest-ranked catalog set on the newly revamped chart and thus sports a "re-entry" tag. Not surprisingly, it's a seasonal effort and is also found at No. 2 on Top Holiday Albums (see page 36).

22

Thirty of the set's 34 songs reached No. 1 on either the Billboard Hot 100, R&B/Hip-Hop Songs, Dance Club Play Songs or AC charts. It includes her 10 Hot 100 No. 1s and her 16 toppers on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs.

94

The 19-track album is the band's fourth hits set to chart, following "Decade of Decadence" (1991, No. 2), the same-in-name-only "Greatest Hits" (1998, No. 20) and the double-disc "Red, White & Crüe" (2005, No. 6).

As McCartney populates the chart with a bevy of Beatles sets, his new live effort, "Good Evening New York City," bows at No. 16 with 55,000. It's his eighth non-Beatles live album to chart.

With catalog titles allowed back onto the tally, don't be surprised if the chart gets temporarily overwhelmed by seasonal sets. Some of the best-selling holiday albums are older releases.

143

Next week's No. 1 looks likely to be Susan Boyle's debut album, "I Dreamed a Dream," which boasts a cover of Madonna's 1995 No. 6 Hot 100 single "You'll See." Boyle's set could [illegible] in its first week.

161

The chart is raided by old albums from the Beatles and Michael Jackson as the tally blends catalog and current titles for the first time since 1991.

195

The band is one of the 20 acts featured on the latest edition of KTCZ Minneapolis' charity compilation series, "Cities Sampler" (No. 32 with 30,000 copies). Last year's album debuted and peaked at No. 71 with 35,000.

Album track duet with red hot Swift is naturally the most-downloaded track from his No. 1 set. It opens at No. 12 on Hot Digital Songs with 86,000 downloads.

Her second set opens at No. 13 on the Billboard 200 with 67,000 units, well short of the No. 1 start of her 2008 debut that shifted 208,000 in its initial frame. Radio track doubles its download sum (to 66,000) to jump 38-15 on Digital Songs.

With three more entries from his debut album (new at No. 6 on the Billboard 200 with 137,000), all seven songs from that EP have now hit the Hot 100.

BETWEEN THE BULLETS

DJ HERO: GUETTA HITS TOP 10

French DJ/producer David Guetta earns his first career Billboard Hot 100 top 10 as "Sexy Chick," featuring Akon, flies 12-7. The track also makes rare concurrent top 10 jumps on component charts Hot 100 Airplay (11-7, 70 million listener impressions) and Hot Digital Songs (11-8, 96,000 downloads). "Chick," which topped Hot Dance Club Songs in October, returns to the No. 1 slot on Hot Dance Airplay for a fourth week. Guetta first debuted on a Billboard chart six years ago this week when "Just a Little More Love," with Chris Willis on vocals, debuted on the Club list on its way to a No. 15 peak. —Silvio Pietroluongo

Kelly Clarkson collects her second No. 1 on Adult Top 40, as "Already Gone" ascends 2-1. Clarkson spent five weeks at the summit with "Behind These Hazel Eyes" in 2005.

The song's coronation marks the third consecutive leader on the survey for RCA Music Group. Daughtry led for two weeks with "No Surprise" in September, and Kings of Leon followed with an 11-week reign with "Use Somebody." The only prior label to link a trio of toppers in the chart's 13-year history was Arista (now an RMG imprint), which claimed the top spot for 39 straight weeks with Avril Lavigne's "Complicated," Santana's "The Game of Love" (featuring Michelle Branch) and Lavigne's "I'm With You" in 2002-03.

"Already Gone" marks the third Adult Top 40 No. 1 for the song's co-writer, Ryan Tedder, who co-authored Timbaland's "Apologize," featuring his band OneRepublic, and Leona Lewis' "Bleeding Love."

Pearl Jam posts its fifth consecutive top 10 on Triple A, as "Just Breathe" rises 13-10. The band's streak began with "Wishlist" (No. 9) in 1998 and continued with "Last Kiss" (No. 5, 1999), "I Am Mine" (No. 3, 2002) and "The Fixer" (No. 5, September).

GROWING 'NEED'

Lady Antebellum's "Need You Now" bullets in its second week atop Hot Country Songs with the fattest weekly audience sum so far this year and the chart's biggest in more than two years. Up 383,000 impressions, the single collects 38 million audience impressions during the tracking week, surpassing the year's prior best, which happened when labelmate Darius Rucker stacked 37.8 million impressions with "Alright" on the July 15 chart. Lady A registers the biggest weekly audience since Toby Keith's "Love Me If You Can" led the Oct. 20, 2007, chart with 38.1 million impressions. The trio's second album is due Jan. 26. —Wade Jessen

50 LEADS REVAMPED R&B TALLY

After early sales in the prior issue, 50 Cent charges 48-1 with 160,000 units this week for his fourth No. 1 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums in the first issue using the chart's revamped methodology. The tally is now compiled from overall albums sales just as the Billboard 200 and other genre charts are built. The former ranking was based on sales from Nielsen SoundScan's R&B core panel of stores that monitors retailers specializing in urban music. The other R&B core charts (Rap Albums, R&B/Hip-Hop Catalog and R&B/Hip-Hop Singles Sales) also move to the new format. Some albums experience unusual shifts as more sales are factored in. Mass-appeal acts like the Black Eyed Peas (10-4) move up, while genre-specific artists like LeToya (20-29) fall backward, but still have sales gains.

Rapper scores consecutive No. 1s on the Rhythmic chart for the first time in his career, having recently reigned for four weeks with "Run This Town." Overall he celebrates his fifth chart-topper while Alicia Keys earns her fourth.

With the aid of Drake and his usual collaborator Lil Wayne, Birdman (pictured) achieves a new career peak.

Two of her 10 chart hits have reached the top 50 in four weeks or less, including this song, which extends her streak to four straight tracks to reach the territory

Mindy earns double debuts on Mainstream R&B/Hip-Hop as this track enters at No. 39 and "Bedrock," her group effort with Young Money, earns applause at No. 30

The group's first album without Pleasure P arrives with 9,000 on the Billboard 200 (No. 97), a far difference from its last set, which led the list in 2007 with 132,000 units

'PAPERS' CHASE JAY IN TIGHT RACE

Jay-Z's "Empire State of Mind" remains atop Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs, over Usher's "Papers," by the slimmest margin in chart points between the top two songs in six years. With each song earning slightly more than 35 million impressions, the rapper has a 13-point lead—a difference Usher could have overcome with one additional spin from almost any radio station. The chart last witnessed a margin this narrow in April 2003 when 11 points separated Sean Paul's "Get Busy" and 50 Cent's "21 Questions." With three weeks at No. 1, "Empire" matches "I Just Wanna Love You (Give It to Me)" as Jay-Z's longest stint on top as a lead artist. —Raphael George

DIZE DEBUTS AT NO. 1 ON RHYTHM

Under new label Pina, Tony Dize's new set "La Melodia de la Calle Updated" lands atop Latin Rhythm Albums (3,000). Previous effort "La Melodia de la Calle" bowed at No. 20 in the May 3, 2008, issue and peaked at No. 3 a week later. Despite the title, "Updated" is a brand-new set that marks his departure from WY, the imprint of longtime collaborators Wisin & Yandel. Lead single "El Doctorado" climbs 11-5 on Latin Rhythm Airplay (8.6 million in audience, up 22%). —Rauly Ramirez

CTORS BAND TOGETHER FOR CHARITY

eg Grunberg plays a police detective on NBC's "Heroes," t for the actor, his real hero is his 13-year-old epileptic son. "My son is without question my hero, because he's dealing th it every day," says Grunberg, who's determined to move ilepsy research forward.

To accomplish this goal, he rallied a "supergroup" of mu- ally inclined actors to start Band From TV, whose lineup in- ıdes self-taught drummer Grunberg, guitarists James Denton Desperate Housewives") and Adrian Pasdar ("Heroes"), fid- player Jesse Spencer ("House") and singer Bob Guiney ("The Bachelor"). All the proceeds that the group earns from albums, merch and concerts—where it plays rock covers ranging from Bruce Springsteen to the Killers—are do- nated to such charities as the Fender Music Foundation, the National Coalition Against Domestic Vio- lence, Save the Children and the Pe- diatric Epilepsy Project.

"We're not fooling ourselves by nking people are coming out just for the music," Grunberg s. "We are actors, but we don't take ourselves too seriously." When Grunberg founded the project three years ago, he ıgh it would only last for a couple of shows. But "the of- s keep pouring in," he says. "We won't play for under 00,000 now, because we need to make a dent." So far, Band ım TV has raised more than $2 million.

Last October, the group released the CD/DVD set "Hoggin' the Covers," which reached No. 28 on Billboard's Top In- ependent Albums chart and No. 10 on Top Heatseekers Al- ms. It has sold 2,000 copies in the United States, according Nielsen SoundScan.

INSIDE TRACK

SAADIQ PREPS NEW SET

Raphael Saadiq contends that he hasn't started working on the follow-up to his 2008 album, "The Way I See It," but in the next breath he acknowledges that "I've recorded some things. I've got a couple of things I like."

Look for him to return to his home studio in January to start working in earnest on the set, and Saadiq says fans can expect it to follow the old-school-fueled path the former Tony! Toni! Toné! leader has been following since his 2002 solo debut, "Instant Vintage."

"There will be more uptempos," Saadiq says, "but there'll be some '60s and some '70s and some soulful kind of funk, kind of rock . . . I love playing with all different types of music, but I've had more fun this year playing music than I've had in my whole life, so I think I want to play in that arena again a little bit. But I want to raise the bar a whole lot, too."

While fans wait for that next album they can sample some other Saadiq work that's currently available. He collaborated on a pair of songs on Ledisi's latest album, "Turn Me Loose," and co-wrote and produced Mary J. Blige's "I Can See in Color" for the film "Precious: Based on the Novel Push by Sapphire." Saadiq is also executive producer of a new sitcom, "Love That Girl," and is developing videogames with his company IllFonic.

Starting Over

Labels Should Pay More Heed To Release Windows And Other Product Innovations

BY MARK MULLIGAN

As the first decade of the 21st century draws to a close, it's becoming increasingly apparent that fundamental changes are needed to pull the recording industry into the digital age.

Subscription services have fallen short of the finish line and look increasingly irrelevant in the context of Spotify. The 99-cent download model was a useful transition technology but it clearly isn't enough to offset the impact of the CD's prolonged demise. And ad-supported and subsidized models all have a long way to go.

The problem isn't a shortage of business models. Rather, the underlying product itself needs work. We've had business model innovation. Now is the time for a phase of product innovation.

The immense challenge is to persuade consumers that music is worth paying for again. The scarcity that was a key factor in the value of music disappeared with the rise of Napster. Content scarcity can never be truly regained, so value must be re-established with the scarcity of convenient, compelling services operating within three broad music release windows:

1. Preview: Right at the top of the release cycle, this is the window in which the latest releases should be first "aired." The only consumers who should have access to this window should be those who pay for premium music products, such as those that package music with additional content and greater levels of interactivity.

2. Mainstream pay: This is the current mainstream release window. We suggest that it remain the home of CDs. CDs will soon be obsolete as a mass-market product, and relegating them to the second tier of release priority will prove a useful tactic for grandfathering the product.

3. Free, ad-supported services: This last window is a full month-and-a-half after the first, which strikes the right balance between communicating clear premium value to the top tier and ensuring that free services aren't hopelessly outdated.

But we believe that even more needs to be done. What's required is a radical overhaul of the core music product. Though formats have changed, the primary product (i.e., a collection of songs) has remained largely unchanged through the years. We propose that the straitjacket of the album format can now be shaken off and replaced by a steady stream of creative output as part of a continual artist-fan relationship.

> Future music products need to blend interactivity, multimedia, multiplatform convenience and social networking functions to create something totally new.

So where would all the extra content come from? Much of it is already here. Artists have been creating a much wider range of creative assets for some time, including backstage footage, covers, remixes and mobile apps. We argue that this content should no longer be seen as a way of selling albums and gigs, but rather as an end in itself.

This is an MTV moment in the digital age for the record labels. It was only after MTV had established itself as a successful business that labels realized music videos were a valuable commodity in their own right rather than just a promotional tool to be given away for free. Now it is time for them to learn the same lessons about value-added content.

The fan experience is also in need of extensive innovation. We believe that future music products will need to adopt a platform-agnostic world view that encompasses powerful and social interactivity to empower consumers to create their own unique experiences.

It's time to build music products around consumer needs, not business needs. That might sound like a truism, but so much of current digital music innovation falls short of this crucially important value. Interactivity is going to be key to successful music product innovation, including empowering consumers to make the listening experience their own and to bring their connected friends into that unique experience. A touch-screen netbook would be the perfect form factor for such a product.

Future music products need to blend interactivity, multimedia, multiplatform convenience and social networking functions to create something totally new. The vision here is of a product that essentially behaves like a multiplatform app and facilitates multiple levels of interactivity.

It would deliver music of course, but also dynamic additional content: live chat with fans and bands, games, videos, concert simulcasts, the ability to remix tracks—basically everything that's relevant to the listening experience.

I could go on, but you can see where I'm heading. Tomorrow's music products need to be unrecognizable to be relevant in the post-Media Meltdown age. Done right, product innovation could be the music industry's ticket out of the 21st-century meltdown in which it finds itself. ...

Second Time Around

Grammy Nomination Special Sees Viewership Slip

For the second year, the Grammy Awards bet on a splashy TV show to draw attention and viewers. And for the second year, the results failed to set its time slot on fire.

Still, the Recording Academy deemed the evening a success, emphasizing that "Grammy Nominations Concert Live!!—Countdown to Music's Biggest Night" provided nominees and performers with a welcome platform to reach a prime-time audience.

The Dec. 2 Grammy nomination special, which took place at Los Angeles' Club Nokia, pulled in 6.3 million viewers, down from the 7 million who watched last year's special, according to Nielsen.

The CBS telecast finished fourth in its 9 p.m. time slot behind Fox's "Glee," NBC's "Law & Order: SVU" and ABC's "Modern Family." But Recording Academy president/CEO Neil Portnow downplayed the importance of the show's ratings.

"What we've done here is given access to literally many millions of people to get involved as we roll out the nominations, to participate, get them in the mode of the kickoff week for the Grammy season," Portnow says. "So from that standpoint, it continues to be a resounding success. It certainly is viewed upon by us and the network as a terrific promotional tool for the actual show in January. That's the reason we're doing this."

Might the middling ratings affect the nomination special's future? "No, I don't think so," Portnow says. "We're committed and the network is committed . . . When you're in such an early stage in something like this, it takes a while until you hit the stride, in terms of where you think something like this lives."

The show packed plenty of star power, featuring performances by the Black Eyed Peas, Sugarland and Maxwell, as well as the national TV debut of Nick Jonas & the Administration. LL Cool J hosted the show, which also included presenters Linkin Park, Katy Perry, T-Pain, Dwight Yoakam, Smokey Robinson and Ringo Starr.

Dynamic duo BEYONCE and TAYLOR SWIFT captured the most Grammy nods

Completing a trifecta of the big three categories, Beyoncé topped the nominations with 10 nods, including album of the year for "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce," record of the year for "Halo" and song of the year for "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)."

Taylor Swift also received nominations in the top three categories: album of the year for "Fearless" and record and song of the year, alongside co-writer Liz Rose, for "You Belong With Me" en route to a total of eight nominations. The Black Eyed Peas, Maxwell and Kanye West each received six nods.

Prior to the awards, insiders suggested that Whitney Houston might be in the race for some of the top categories after "I Look to You" returned her to the Billboard 200 in grand style. The album was her fourth No. 1 on the chart and first since the Houston-fueled "The Bodyguard" soundtrack spent 20 weeks at No. 1 in 1993, but the singer was shut out of the nominations.

Although West snared six nods for "808s and Heartbreak," his antics at this year's MTV Video Music Awards (when he disrupted Swift's acceptance speech for best female video) may have hurt his vote tallies, as he wasn't nominated in any of the big three categories.

In addition to Beyoncé's "Fierce" and Swift's "Fearless," the other album of the year nominees are the Black Eyed Peas' "The E.N.D.," Lady Gaga's "The Fame" and Dave Matthews Band's "Big Whiskey and the GrooGrux King."

Apart from Beyoncé and Swift, the record of the year category is rounded out by the Black Eyed Peas' "I Gotta Feeling," Kings of Leon's "Use Somebody" and Lady Gaga's "Poker Face."

Song of the year nominees are "Poker Face" by songwriters Lady Gaga and RedOne; "Pretty Wings" by Hod David and Musze; "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" by Thaddis Harrell, Beyoncé, Terius Nash and Christopher Stewart; "Use Somebody" by Caleb, Jared, Matthew and Nathan Followill; and "You Belong With Me" by Rose and Swift.

The song nominees seemed to correlate with chart success in 2009; all of them reached the top 40 of the Billboard Hot 100, and four of them peaked in the top four of the chart.

Kings of Leon drummer Nathan Followill said the band was thrilled to receive seven nominations in two years for its album "Only by the Night," adding that the group doesn't anticipate touring any more for the set "unless we win four Grammys this year, then we'll be back."

The CMA Launches Search After CEO Resigns

The top administrative post at the County Music Assn. has always been filled from within the organization. But as the CMA embarks on a search to replace CEO Tammy Genovese, that is expected to change.

"The board has been around for 50 years and we have never gone outside, or felt compelled to go outside, of the organization to find leadership," says Randy Goodman, chairman of the CMA board and president of Lyric Street Records. "We have an opportunity now to look globally if we wish."

Genovese, who announced her resignation Dec. 2, had headed the CMA since 2007 and was a 24-year veteran of the organization. She was only the fourth chief administrator in the CMA's history, succeeding Ed Benson, who was executive director for 14 years. Jo Walker-Meador, the CMA's pioneering second executive director, led the organization from 1962 to 1991 and took over administration of the CMA from former WSM executive Harry Stone.

"Jo Walker-Meador and Ed Benson taught me that success is built on hard work, passion and integrity," Genovese said in a statement, which didn't provide a reason for her departure. She couldn't be reached for comment.

Goodman says there isn't a timetable for finding Genovese's replacement. "If we're going to do an expansive search, then putting a time limit on it would defeat the purpose," he says. "We've got competent volunteer leadership [on the board] and we've got really strong senior staff at the CMA. The organization will continue to function, will continue to move ahead, will continue to do the business of CMA."

Under Genovese's watch, the CMA Music Festival enjoyed record-high attendance this year, while the Nov. 11 CMA Awards telecast on ABC garnered the show's best ratings since 2005.

Although country music sales have been unusually robust in 2009 (see Q&A, page 16), they come amid a continued plunge in overall U.S. sales of recorded music. As part of the effort to seek new opportunities for country artists, the CMA conducted a study of the country consumer market last year and hired communications company MS&L in September to be its exclusive sales, marketing and branding partner.

Happy trails: GENOVESE

As for what qualities the CMA is looking for in Genovese's successor, Goodman says that hasn't been decided.

"At this level it's not about tasking someone, it's not about tactical things," he says. "At this level it's more about strategic thinking and somebody who can be a broad global student of all aspects of the media world so that as an organization that is here to promote country music, particularly in a time of great crisis and tu moil, that we've got someone wh can help engage us as we move th along as well."

Steve Moore, chairman-elect of th CMA board and senior VP of AE Live, will serve as interim director du ing the transition. While Genove held the title of CEO, the CMA's a nouncement of her departure said was conducting a search for a ne "executive director."

Why the change in title? "It's pu semantics and has nothing to c with where we end up landing Goodman says, adding with a laug "The next person may be calle 'president' and they may be calle 'czar.' Hell, I don't know."

LEGAL MATTERS

WHAT THE ANTI-COUNTERFEITING TRADE AGREEMENT IS—AND ISN'T

By BEN SHEFFNER

It sounds scary—very scary.

The blogosphere has been abuzz about an international cabal of corporate and government interests plotting in secret to eliminate freedom on the Internet and impose draconian new penalties against illegal use of copyrighted content, all under the guise of negotiating an innocuous-sounding "Anti-Counterfeiting Trade Agreement."

If the ACTA becomes law, warns Cory Doctorow, copyright reform activist and editor of the popular tech blog Boing Boing, "it will be impossible to run a service like Flickr or YouTube or Blogger." In fact, reliable copyright critic Techdirt claims that the ACTA would radically change U.S. law by eliminating the "safe harbor" provisions provided by the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA).

It all sounds frightening. And it would be if it were true—but it's not.

So what exactly is the ACTA? First, it's important to keep in mind that, as of now, there isn't an ACTA. There have been ideas, proposals, drafts and lots of meetings, but as of yet no actual agreement. Instead, major industrialized nations—including the United States, the European Union (EU), Japan, South Korea, Australia and Canada—are negotiating a pact to strengthen global enforcement of intellectual property rights. The talks may drag on for another year or more, and then the signatory nations will have to take whatever steps are required under their own domestic laws to implement its provisions.

Under U.S. law, the ACTA would be an "executive agreement," not a treaty. That means it would achieve the force of law without the constitutional requirement of ratification by a two-thirds majority vote in the Senate. But because it's only an executive agreement, the ACTA can't alter existing U.S. statutory law, including, for example, the Copyright Act or the DMCA.

ACTA critics have two basic complaints. First, they say the negotiation process is being conducted in secret, which prevents the public from making its views known and countering perceived corporate influence over the outcome. It's true that ACTA negotiations don't take place in public. But, like it or not, that's simply the norm for international trade talks.

And in fact the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative has, subject to nondisclosure agreements, briefed a wide variety of interested parties on the ongoing negotiations. Corporate copyright interests including the RIAA and Motion Picture Assn. of America take part, but so do skeptics of copyright enforcement, including representatives from Google, eBay, the Consumer Electronics Assn. and the Center for Democracy and Technology.

The other major complaint focuses on substance. ACTA critics charge that the agreement would impose a mandatory government-enforced, French-style "three strikes" regime that would force Internet service providers to kick off users caught downloading songs, movies or TV shows. While many labels and studio executives favor such a law, the ACTA isn't going to give them what they want because, again, it's only an executive agreement that can't change U.S. law.

It's also worth noting that the DMCA already requires that ISPs must "terminat[e] repeat infringers" in "appropriate circumstances" in order to be covered by safe harbor protections from infringement claims. ISPs have interpreted that provision to require a court determination of infringement, so, in practice, terminations of subscribers by ISPs have been minimal.

So if the ACTA won't—and can't—change U.S. law, what's the point? The purpose of such an agreement is to apply a "standard set of terms and best practices" to copyright enforcement rules in the world's lead-ing economies, says Chris rael, who served as the U.S. ordinator for internation intellectual property enfor ment in the administration former President George Bush and now advises maj copyright owners on interr tional trade issues.

Such practices, according a leaked EU memo summar ing the talks, include granti ISPs safe harbor from infrin ment claims based on wror doing by their users, as long the ISPs take reasonable ste to combat piracy—exactly wl U.S. law already requires.

The ACTA won't end o line piracy. But its goal more rigorous enforceme of copyright protections is profound importance to t recording industry and on should support.

Evolutionary Road

More Digital Music Advances Will Perfect Biz Models, Not Blow Them Up

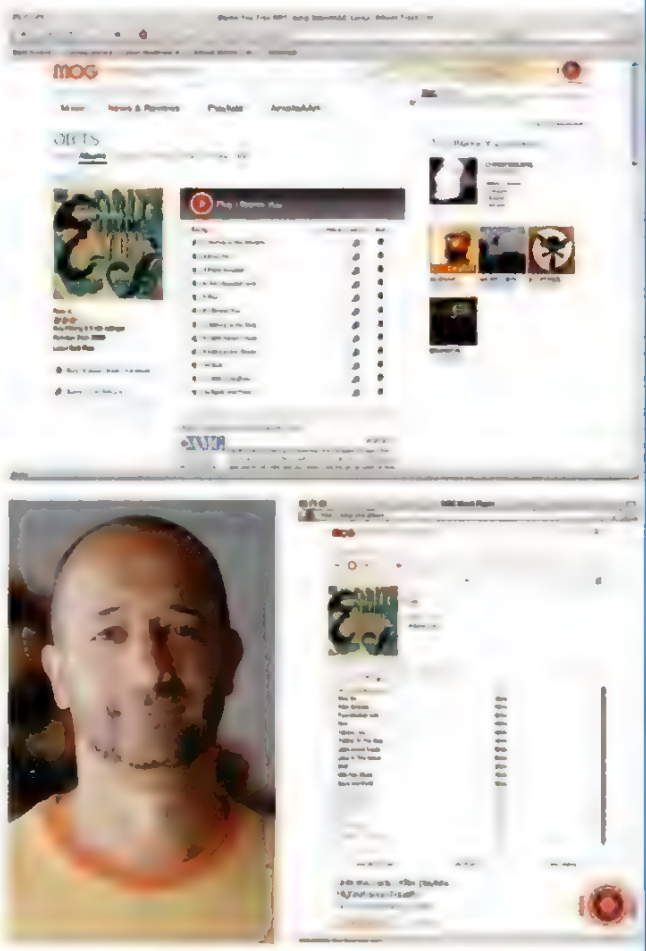
Has the revolution come to an end?

The past decade has played host to an unprecedented level of upheaval, innovation and opportunity as digital music distribution exploded into the mainstream. But as the '00s draw to a close, less convulsive changes appear to be on the horizon.

Instead, the decade ahead will be about refining the revolutionary ideas of the past 10 years—like "freemium," "direct to consumer" and "fan engagement"—into workable, profitable businesses. The focus will shift from the broad-stroke hype of new models to the more mundane details of their execution.

Take the recently launched MOG All Access streaming music service. At first glance, it's easy to say that we've seen this all before. As of Dec. 2, users can stream an unlimited amount of music on demand, create playlists and listen to customizable radio stations for $5 per month. Doesn't sound much different from the $5 subscription plan that Yahoo Music Unlimited offered almost five years ago, or Napster's $5 monthly offering that includes five free digital rights management-free downloads.

But how MOG offers these same services is what CEO David Hyman is betting will set the initiative apart from the others.



"Before the iPod came out, there were lots of MP3 players," he says. "It was about doing it right and nailing it from a consumer perspective. Same with iTunes. So much of it, especially in the case of music, has to do with ease of use and look and feel. The devil's in the details."

For instance, all music services have music search or playlist-building features. MOG's challenge as a Web-based product is to make those features—not to mention the simple act of playing a song—feel as fast and easy as doing so from a music library stored on a user's desktop.

MOG spent three months defining the specifications for its playlist-building feature before programming even started. It took another six months to create the search feature alone. The result is a rather slick, intuitive service that will remind many of the elegant simplicity that's made Spotify such a huge success in Europe.

Another sign of incremental but potentially important progress is the Vevo music video venture, which is going live Dec. 8. Streaming music videos online is nothing new. Even streaming in HD quality, as Vevo is doing, is not a first.

The difference here is that the labels involved are taking control of the sales and the content. By hosting all of the content in one spot and syndicating it to others, Vevo will create a scarcity of inventory, with the hope of creating higher per-impression ad rates and broader sponsorship/branding opportunities.

Refining the model: The new MOG All Access subscription service (above) and MOG CEO DAVID HYMAN.

Both MOG's subscription service and Vevo represent positive steps for a digital music market still searching for the right mix of user excitement, technological innovation and revenue. So could a number of other digital music services poised to launch or relaunch in the months ahead, including the revamped Project Playlist, Grooveshark, Rdio and a U.S. version of Spotify.

Of course, there remain some pockets of potentially revolutionary developments in the years ahead. One is the motion-capture add-ons being developed for videogame consoles, such as Microsoft's Project Natal, which could lead to some interesting new music-based videogame concepts. Another is the proposal to offer Internet service providers blanket licenses for digital music, which would allow ISPs to charge a small monthly fee for access to all the music subscribers want, while distributing the funds to labels and artists based on usage. And mobile access to digital music remains a source of great potential, despite its disappointing history.

But on the whole, the future of digital music will be marked not by quantum leaps, but baby steps. Some may call this slow and plodding forecast boring or unsexy. But after 10 years of utter chaos, a more conservative and measured approach will be a welcome change. So long to the revolution—welcome to the evolution. ...

WIDE RECEIVER

The iPhone can be lots of different things—a music player, a gaming platform, a GPS device and even, on occasion, a phone. But one thing it's not is an HD radio.

But it can become one with the help of a plug-in accessory from iBiquity, the company that developed the technology for HD radio. iBiquity's Gigaware Navigation Control HD Radio Receiver acts as a de facto HD antenna for the iPhone and the iPod Touch. It works in conjunction with a free downloadable app, allowing users to tune in HD channels, preview content, bookmark favorites and tag songs for later purchase through the iTunes Tagging feature present in all HD radio broadcasts.

The receiver is available exclusively at RadioShack for $80. —AB

Last.fm says it gained more than 1 million new registered users in a week as a result of its integration with the Xbox 360 gaming system. While there's no way of telling how many of those new users will continue to use Last.fm, it provides further evidence of the Xbox system's potential as a device to access music.

Money In The Bank

Latin Artists Are Increasingly Investing In Their Own Careers

In the last month, as I've rounded up information for year-end stories, one theme keeps coming up from various sources.

It's the practice of artists—whether they are signed to majors, indies or their own labels—increasingly investing in their own careers, spending money on things labels would have covered without blinking an eye just a couple of years ago. This encompasses a wide range of costs from the mundane to the unexpected, be it paying for a backup band for TV performances (an expense that some TV shows don't cover but should) to the cost of radio promotion.

Cash up front: VERDAGUER

The practice is so prevalent that it's no longer an issue of whether it's good or bad; it simply is, although many cling to the notion that labels should foot the bill for absolutely every single piece of cost involved in the promotion and development of an artist.

This is, of course, a lovely thought, and really, it's the way it should be.

However, artists who are willing to invest in the face of dwindling label returns seem to get more love from those labels, who see them as partners in their development.

The practice is particularly common among reggaetón acts, many of whom started as indies with their own companies. Wisin & Yandel, for example, talk openly about how they routinely help pay for their expensive music videos.

Likewise, Venevision International music VP Jorge Pino attributes some of the success of the April release of "El Amor" by Tito "El Bambino" to the fact that "we haven't stopped investing, from the first day up to now. And we've had great help from an artist who has also invested in his own career."

At a time when labels see fewer album sales but artists are earning more bookings and publishing income, labels appreciate an act stepping up to share costs. This allows for the promotion of, say, not just one or two singles, but three or four down the line.

And then, of course, there are artists who act as their own company, investment included. Take veteran Argentine singer Diego Verdaguer, who has gained new relevance with his current, Latin Grammy Award-nominated album, "Mexicano Hasta las Pampas," produced by Joan Sebastian. Released on his own label (in partnership with Sebastian) with U.S. distribution on Select-O-Hits (and in Mexico on Universal), the album has been worked by a "small team that's giving me results," which includes marketing, radio, press and Internet promotion. Verdaguer has been doing this for a while, but his most recent albums were live sets promoted on TV. "Mexicano" has required strong investment in radio, which he has footed on his own.

"Truth is, it makes things far more expensive, but it's part of the game," he says.

Verdaguer is willing to invest because he has a broad, loyal fan base and has often worked independently even when distributed by majors. In this case, he and Sebastian saw the big picture of repositioning him in the world music market. Although sales haven't been as expected (given the downturn in the market) there has been a strong return on awareness that will lead to a major tour next year.

For Verdaguer, the investment is worthwhile because he runs a global business that includes touring throughout Latin America, so he can recoup his investment. Otherwise, he says, "It's not worth it. It would be a business that generates an appearance of success, which is wonderful, but there isn't a monetary exchange." ••••

THE BILLBOARD ¿Q&A?

Jenni Rivera has established herself as a major star with her saucy take on banda music, into which she incorporates stories from her own life and gives voice to a hard-partying, hard-loving persona. Rivera released her long-awaited mariachi album, "La Gran Señora," Dec. 1 on Fonovisa. While it's less autobiographical than her previous work, Rivera says that a mariachi album is a commercial risk she's earned the opportunity to take.

Why did you decide to do a mariachi album now and not earlier in your career?
I don't think I was ready for it. And I don't think the industry was ready for it. You have to prove that you've conquered and that you've created a position with a certain style, which was banda . . . In order to record mariachi, people need to believe it. And how will they believe it if you haven't lived it? So I needed to live it, I guess, first, and then express it throughout the recording.

One of the tracks on the album is Freddy Fender's "Before the Next Teardrop Falls." Have you always been a fan of his?
Big time. I recorded years ago . . . sometime in the '90s [a banda version of Fender's] "Wasted Days and Wasted Nights." I was talking to some politicians here in L.A.—we're working on a few things together—and they are like those veterano cholo type of guys from back in the day, like, you know they were cholos when they were young but now they're successful politicians. They were in my kitchen sitting with me and I thought, "What can I record for these [guys]?" And right then and there, I thought, "Another Freddy Fender song." But let's give it, of course, a mariachi touch, but very acoustic.

Are there any other non-regional Mexican singers that you are planning to cover in the future?
There might be some Dolly Parton songs that I would like to do. I would like to do some type of Brad Paisley, something like that, maybe translating it. I love his lyrics. And do it Jenni-style, but in Spanish, of course, maybe in mariachi or maybe norteño. I'm a big country fan, and I know that would surprise a lot of people because I'm so Mexican. Because I do what I do with such passion. But I'm a music lover above all.

Do you have any branded products coming out?
The fragrance [JR, Jenni Rivera] is out. I didn't just want to license it out to a major company and get royalties from it. I am doing it from the bottom up, from the packaging to the fragrance to the artwork to everything. I want to be able to distribute it and work hard for it, put it in stores myself, of course with my fragrance team, and maybe later on it could become something bigger. It's important to me that I own it and that I have something to offer my public, but that's owned by my children. Right now it's available on the Web site and pretty soon it will be in stores like Target, Wal-Mart, La Curacao and Warehouse Shoe Sale.

Direct-To-Consumer Sales On The Rise In Europe

ONDON—Direct-to-consumer sales of music nd merchandising are gaining traction in Eupe as labels tap into fan demand for exclue product.

Among the majors, Warner Music Internaonal has been particularly active in developping its European direct-to-consumer busiess since it began taking artist Web sites -house in 2008.

Direct-to-consumer sales are "intertwined ith our artist partnerships, or 360, stratgy," says Isabel Garvey, WMI senior VP of ommercial channels and consumer marketg for Europe, the Middle East and Africa. [It] is the centerpoint of all that, because gives us the opportunity to present all icets of the artists we're now representing one place."

Garvey says WMI offers combinations f music, merchandising and—currently rough a third party—ticketing. WMI now perates sites for about 25% of its frontne European acts.

While she won't disclose how much revnue these services are generating, Garvey ys the number of unique users across all its tes for front-line European acts increased 0% in the 12 months ended Oct. 31 from the same period a year earlier, while the average number of page views per visit rose from two to six.

Sales have been particularly strong for products that target an artist's core fan base, Garvey says, noting that almost 100% of the revenue from Spanish star Alejandro Sanz's official site (AlejandroSanz.es) comes from fan club subscriptions or exclusive bundles. About 80% of fan club members opted for the premium Paradise XL membership at €38.99 ($58.37) per year.

Garvey says monthly unique users of Sanz's site rose 300% to 650,000 since WMI took over in July. "We have a really engaged artist blogging four to five times a day, with a very active community around that," she says. "That traffic is generating really decent sales."

Atlantic pop artist Little Boots' site, LittleBootsMusic.co.uk, features a Bootique shop offering exclusive merchandise and bundles. Before the release of Little Boots' album "Hands," the site sold an album bundle comprising CD and vinyl versions of the project, as well as an exclusive, 33-minute MP3 mix of music from "Hands," non-album tracks and remixes. The bundle "proved very effective," says Karen Tillotson, Little Boots' co-manager at London-based This Is Music, although she declined to give sales figures.

"In an age where music can be obtained for free, label and artist have to think of clever ways to make digital and physical product attractive," Tillotson says.

At London-based direct-to-consumer specialist Digital Stores, which operates 60 online stores for acts including the Beatles, Queen and Pet Shop Boys, commercial director Simon Coates reports a sharp upturn in physical music sales.

"Year-on-year music sales are over 100% up—it's crazy," he says, although he, too, didn't reveal unit figures.

Coates says a £90 ($149) boxed set of Queen's "Absolute Greatest" compilation, exclusive to QueenOnlineStore.com in a limited edition of 500, sold out in 12 hours. While physical demand is up, he adds, "digital's pretty much flat."

The Official Charts Co. doesn't break out U.K. direct-to-consumer market-share data. But managing director Martin Talbot confirms it's a growing sector, with "an increasing number of retailers in this area coming to us to become chart return retailers."

The demise of digital marketing company and direct-to-consumer mainstay Trinity Street (Billboard.biz, Feb. 16) hasn't dampened artist enthusiasm for direct sales.

"Trinity Street overpromised and underdelivered," Coates says. "But that's worked in our favor, because bands have come to us."

Garvey maintains Trinity Street's shuttering also represents an opportunity for WMI. "The players out there are quite fragmented, in terms of what products they can offer," she says. "We have something unique, being able to offer everything together." ....

TEMPORARY MEASURES

U.K. Biz Targets Holiday Shoppers With Pop-Up Stores

LONDON—On a recent Friday evening, shoppers at a new HMV store in the south London neighborhood of Lewisham were scanning a range of CDs and DVDs, citing interest in everything from the new Leona Lewis album, "Echo," to the complete boxed set of "The Sopranos."

It's an encouraging sight—but after January, this HMV could disappear as suddenly as it arrived; the location is one of 10 temporary stores launched to capitalize on the Christmas shopping season.

"That's a shame," one shopper says. She has just picked up the Killers' debut album, "Hot Fuss," for £4 ($6.65) and says she still wants to purchase physical music, even more so this time of year, "because you want to buy presents."

With the demise of entertainment retailer Zavvi and mass merchant Woolworths in early 2009 removing more than 900 stores from the market, the HMV initiative is just one of a range of measures aimed at making sure U.K. Christmas shoppers can still find physical product.

"There is some concern that having fewer outlets will particularly affect impulse purchases," says Kim Bayley, director-general of the Entertainment Retailers Assn., who believes the HMV stores are "guaranteed to perform—where you get the footfall, it's quite easy to sell CDs and DVDs."

HMV now has 280 shops in the United Kingdom and Ireland, but property director Mark Bowles says, "There are still quite a few towns that don't have a specialist entertainment offer."

The focus is on chart titles—all stores are chart registered—and Bowles says that based on "early, encouraging signs," its holiday sales strategy will be repeated next Christmas. HMV will also consider a "longer-term solution" for sites that report strong sales.

According to U.K. trade group BPI, Woolworths had a 9.8% market share of albums by volume in 2008, while Zavvi had 8.1%. Official Charts Co. data shows that total 2009 album sales through Nov. 21 are down 6.8% year on year.

Brian Rose, Universal Music U.K. managing director for the commercial division, says the temporary stores have "started well" and believes HMV's strategy "will plug a really significant gap," but has also worked to find new retail partners.

As a result, around 220 of computer game retailer Game's stores will sell a top 20 range of albums from Universal and Sony Music from Nov. 16 until the end of the Christmas shopping season.

"We know from our research there is real overlap across entertainment products," a Game spokesman says.

Rose hopes that, if successful, the seasonal stores will be expanded for next Christmas or made permanent. He has also negotiated an exclusive with fashion retailer Peacocks for 150 stores to sell chart titles during the Christmas period, alongside existing clothing from Universal-owned merch company Bravado.

Both Woolworths and Zavvi have been reborn on line. Cheshire-based e-com merce provider Hut Grou acquired the Zavvi name an relaunched its online store i April, and it also powers th entertainment store for Woo worths.co.uk, owned by on line retail group Shop Direc

"Over 50% of the [Zavv customer data that we boug engaged again and starte purchasing," Hut comme cial director Richard Chapp says. He notes that musi sales increased 158% in valu from September to Octobe

Meanwhile, Rose says hasn't been easy persuadi people that now is the time stock music, but he believe the gifting season will pro there's plenty of life left i physical product.

"We've got a responsibili between now and Christm just to make the thing work he says.

Contentious Collections

Russian Collecting Society Faces Accreditation Questions

MOSCOW—The Russian government's appointment of collecting society VOIS as the only accredited group allowed to collect performing rights fees on recorded music remains a contentious move.

The decision, effective Aug. 6, sidelined two other Russian societies, ROUPI and RFA, and caused consternation among international labels (Billboard, Sept. 19), particularly in the case of RFA, which had collected license fees for many years.

RFA "had the overwhelming backing of the local and the international industry," IFPI spokesman Adrian Strain says.

Both ROUPI—which represents some Russian independents—and RFA declared they would appeal the decision, although only ROUPI has done so. Meanwhile, some music users continue paying royalties to RFA, despite VOIS' sole agency status.

The IFPI "continues to support RFA's activities to collect [for] rights owners that have directly authorized it to collect royalties on their behalf," Strain says.

Billboard caught up with VOIS general director Andrey Krichevsky to ask him about the company's activities.

Accredited collector: VOIS' ANDREY KRICHEVSKY

How have the majors reacted to VOIS' accreditation?

Sony and Universal's decisions . . . on whether to transfer neighboring rights to external management are made in London, and their European offices' positions are largely following the views held by IFPI.

[But] local EMI and Warner licensees showed positive reaction. Alexander Blinov, who heads EMI's local representative S.B.A./Gala Records, transferred both Gala Records and EMI catalogs to VOIS after accreditation. Alexei Nikitin, head of [Warner licensee] Nikitin Recording Co., joined the VOIS board when it launched in April 2008 and transferred Nikitin's Russian catalog to VOIS quite a while ago. [Warner's catalog remains with RFA.]

Can RFA continue collecting royalties for the majors?

Legally, the royalties may only be collected and distributed by an accredited organization. The accreditation was given to us because VOIS had already shown solid collection figures. The numbers speak for themselves. In the 12 months before the accreditation, RFA collected about 40 million rubles ($1.4 million) in royalties, while we collected over 370 million rubles ($12.8 million).

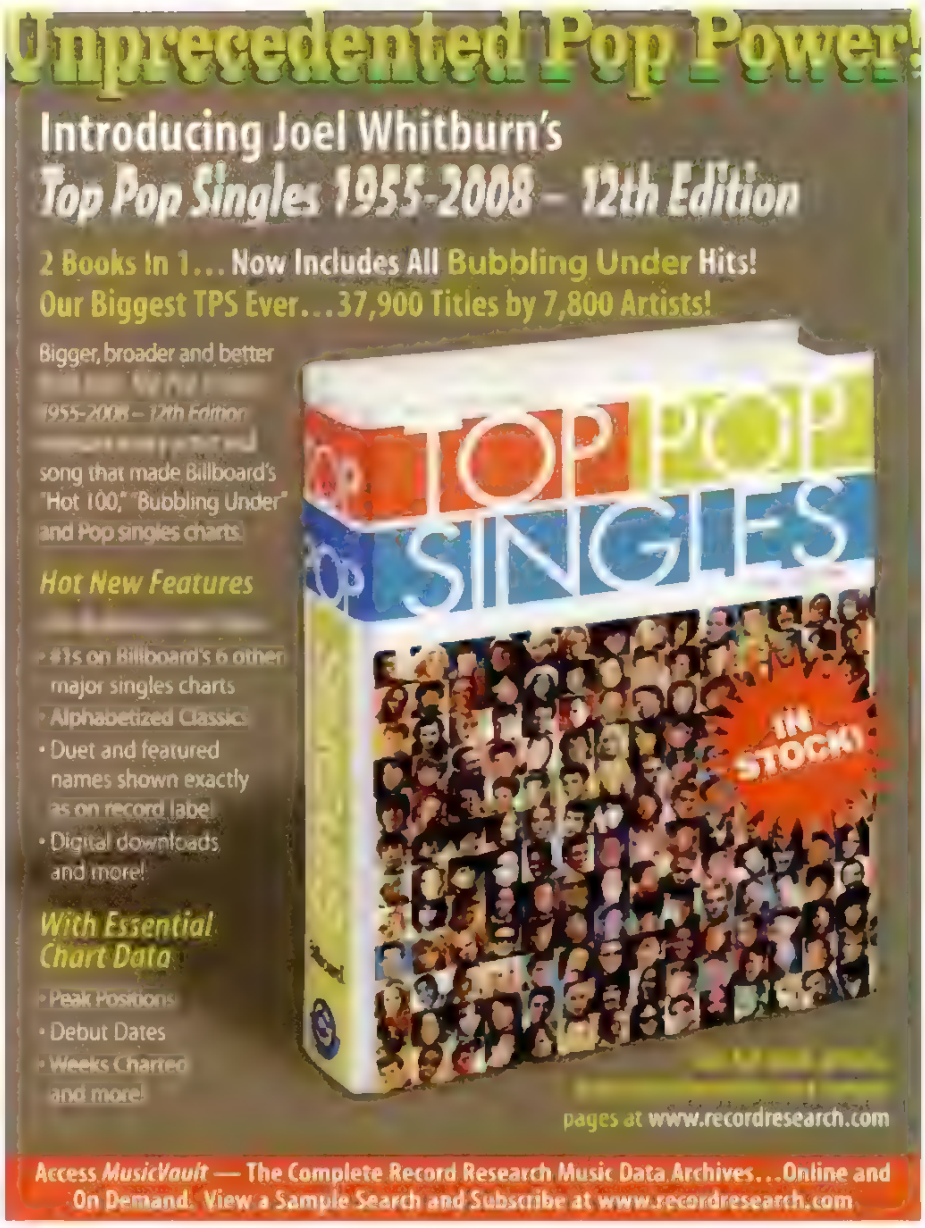
But we're prepared to work closely with RFA and have invited them to name a representative to join VOIS as deputy general director, so we could tap into their experience.

What about the IFPI's complaint that, pre-accreditation, VOIS was collecting for rights holders with whom it didn't have contracts?

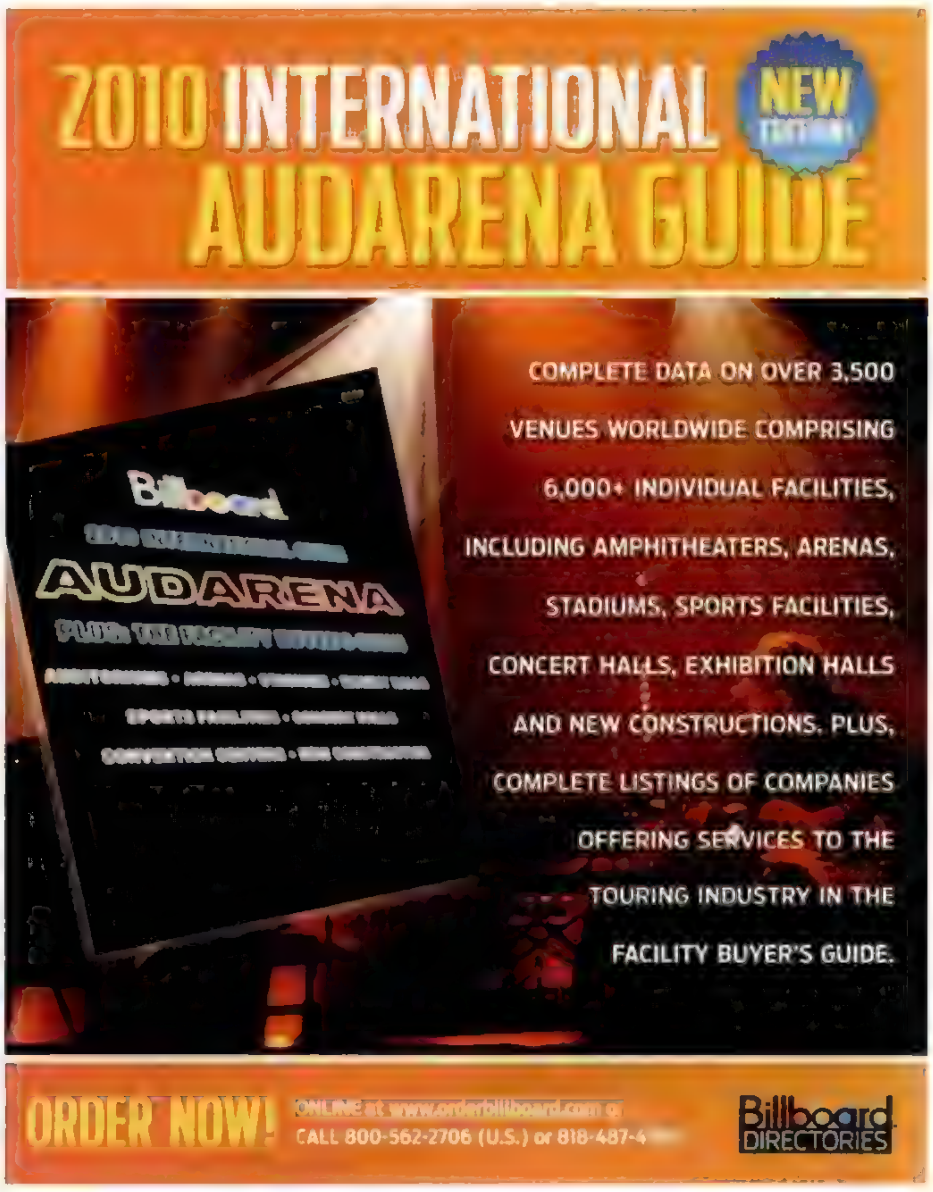
We're ready to present all the necessary evidence that will confirm that up and until Aug. 6, all collections by VOIS had only been on behalf of rights holders who had standing contracts with us. Given the intensity of battle that we had to go through to get the accreditation, it would have never been granted had we committed so grave a violation.

What are your immediate plans for reciprocal deals with overseas societies?

We're working to sign contracts with European and U.S. societies. The response from many has been that they would be happy to cooperate and are very much interested in getting royalties from Russia.



However, performers' right societies like [international group] SCAPR and [Pan-European group] AEPO-ARTIS have expressed their intention not to sign contracts with VOIS until they develop a consolidated position. We are concerned about a certain dialogue taking place under the table—you're rather used to seeing those remnants of the old way of thinking in the [Commonwealth of Independent States], but I cannot say we expected that from our European counterparts.



Under VOIS, will international labels see increased collections for neighboring rights?

There will be a major increase, [although] until the end of the year we will be in the so-called startup phase, fine-tuning our collection system, because now we can collect for all rights holders.

My forecast is that we will at least double the current figures [during 2010]—and that would be the worst-case scenario. ••••

Ticketfly Uses Social Media To Get The Word Out About Purchases

Technology has lowered the barriers to entry to the ticketing market. At the same time, social media has emerged as a key influencer. These two paths converge with the launch of Ticketfly, which aims to be a ticketer, marketer and digital ticketing facilitator, while building fan communities around the ticket-buying experience.

Ticketfly's founding partners/co-CEOs Dan Teree and Andrew Dreskin—veteran execs of pioneering Internet ticketing company Ticketweb, which Ticketmaster acquired in 2000—are getting traction out of the gate with such clients as the 9:30 Club in Washington, D.C.; Knitting Factory venues; and the recently signed Troubadour in West Hollywood. And Ticketfly just raised a fresh round of capital.

In launching Ticketfly six months ago, Teree and Dreskin think they've built a better mousetrap, at least when it comes to online opportunities. "It seemed to us that ticketing software hadn't changed all the much for the past decade," Dreskin says. "You're looking for a system that does inventory management, doesn't oversell, you get a check on time. There are plenty of those that do that. But promoters seem keen on the next generation of ticketing technology, which will allow them to maximize revenue and have more efficient pricing."

While Ticketfly is building technologies to deal with such issues as yield management and dynamic pricing, marketing is now a key focus. In many cases, when the Ticketfly guys think marketing, they're thinking social media and the opportunity for venues and promoters to leverage the ticket buyer as a sales or marketing channel.

A good example of this is how Ticketfly uses Facebook to reach its growing user base, particularly in the key 20-35 demo. Ticketfly's strategies start with such basic initiatives as rewarding Facebook users who share concert experiences with friends.

"Ticketfly is very focused on creating reward programs that excite and stimulate fans to tell their friends about what's going on in their music lives, rewarding them with free tickets, meet the band, VIP packages, things like that," Teree says.

"If you think about a kid buying a ticket and sending it to his [Facebook] wall, and all of his friends seeing that ticket having the ability to buy a ticket," Dreskin adds, "then the kid can generate points, and for every one of those folks who buys a ticket and sends it to their wall, you think about the magnitude of the exponential opportunity there for the promoters."

Ticketfly also helps venues and promoters coordinate their various digital marketing efforts.

"The way the ticketing world works today is you have silos that don't really speak to each other, and it creates inefficiencies," Dreskin says. "If I'm a promoter and I have the White Stripes or whatever band coming, and when I confirm that act I have to build it into my ticketing software, I have to have it built on my Web site, my e-mail newsletter, Facebook, MySpace, Twitter. What we've done is develop an integrated solution where it's a single data entry and it updates down the line."

Ticketing clubs and small venues are one thing, but the game changes dramatically when it's a major tour at a large venue with a hot on-sale. This is where the scale and experience of a Ticketmaster comes into play. Live Nation launched an in-house ticketing company this year and attracted attention when a massive Phish tour on-sale melted down the system (Billboard.biz, Feb. 4).

Dreskin says Ticketfly isn't ready for a huge stadium show—yet. "The way technology has advanced has made it significantly more possible for young, technology-heavy companies like ours to handle big demand," he says. "One thing we set out to do when we started the company was architect the system in a way that allows us to be highly scaleable and handle big demand. What only Ticketmaster could do 15 years ago with the big iron is just not the case anymore. While we're not ready for the big stadium on-sale today, there's no reason why we won't be in 12 months or so."

Does Ticketfly's rapid growth support Ticketmaster and Live Nation's contention that their merger won't prevent other ticketing companies from flourishing?

"That's certainly crossed our mind," Dreskin says. "We've been selling tickets for like six months, and we've already signed up 10-20 of the best club-sized venues and promoters in the U.S. We don't see any reason why we can't move upstream and handle larger facilities, promoters and events. There's certainly no shortage of competitors, but we're feeling optimistic for sure." ••••

BOC AND YOUR FRIENDS AT LIVE NATION

BY LOUIS HAU

PRESIDENT/ CEO, CAPITOL RECORDS NASHVILLE

Mike Dungan

The Capitol Nashville chief talks about country music's recent commercial revival—and reveals what was on Darius Rucker's demo tapes.

It's been a surprisingly robust 2009 for country music—even for artists who aren't named Taylor Swift.

Country album sales in the United States totaled 38.7 million units through the week ending Nov. 29, down only 2.6% from the same period last year, while overall album sales have plunged 13.4%, according to Nielsen SoundScan.

Swift's ascent to pop stardom has helped draw new fans to country. Country's broadening appeal is also evident at Capitol Records Nashville. The label's roster illustrates how country music has become the big-tent genre that rock used to be, with hitmakers as stylistically diverse as Keith Urban, Trace Adkins, Hootie & the Blowfish frontman Darius Rucker, Dierks Bentley and Lady Antebellum.

Playing a leading role in building this roster has been Capitol Nashville president/CEO Mike Dungan. The industry vet has headed the label since 2000, when it was primarily known as the home of Garth Brooks, the superstar who led country to the promised land of the commercial mainstream. Brooks' success as a crossover star still provides a template for country artists with broad pop appeal, including Urban and Lady A.

Dungan previously spent eight years at Arista Nashville, where he ultimately rose to senior VP/GM. He is a former president of the board of the Country Music Assn. and remains a CMA director. In an interview with Billboard, Dungan talks about how country music and his label have been adapting to changes in the market.

Overall, U.S. album sales are down about 13%, but country sales are down only 2.6%. What accounts for this strong performance?

We definitely have a new class of stars and they're delivering more than their fair share down to the bottom line. It's led by Taylor Swift of course, but we're getting our share as well, with Lady Antebellum and Darius Rucker, if we can call him a new star. He's just won a CMA best new artist award, so I guess he's new.

Do you think this sales revival has legs?

I do. I think a younger generation is discovering this music. Looking back, we've excelled when our pop counterparts aren't delivering the message as well as they could be. In the '90s it was driven by this magnanimous personality, Garth Brooks. When people looked at what he was doing, they leaned over here and checked out the rest—and loved what they were hearing. I think we're going through the same experience this year, led by a lot of people—Rascal Flatts, Keith Urban, artists like that, but at the top of the list is Taylor Swift. We have first-time fans coming out to shows. They're excited. This is a whole new world for them.

The last several years had been a tough time for recorded-music sales, and country in particular. What happened on the way down?

It's a combination of things. A lot of it involves radio listening habits. When our pop counterparts are performing well and the artists are delivering music that's interesting and compelling, then it tends to draw people back to the pop stations as a primary listening source. Also, some has been self-inflicted—anytime the industry has success, it tends to copy itself—although we [at Capitol] try not to. And that makes for complacency. I think that's where the pop field is at right now. There's a lot of sameness out there.

Country music remains dependent on CD sales. What is the genre doing to cope with the closing of music retailers and shrinking floor space at big-box stores?

It's definitely alarming. If we were making straight-down-the-middle, old-style country music, I'd be freaking out. But in the last nine years at this label, we've made our way in the world by engaging artists with a younger appeal, ones that are challenging the status quo creatively. We sell a lot more records to a younger audience than people would think in country music, so it's less alarming to us because we have an audience that's more engaged in the digital world.

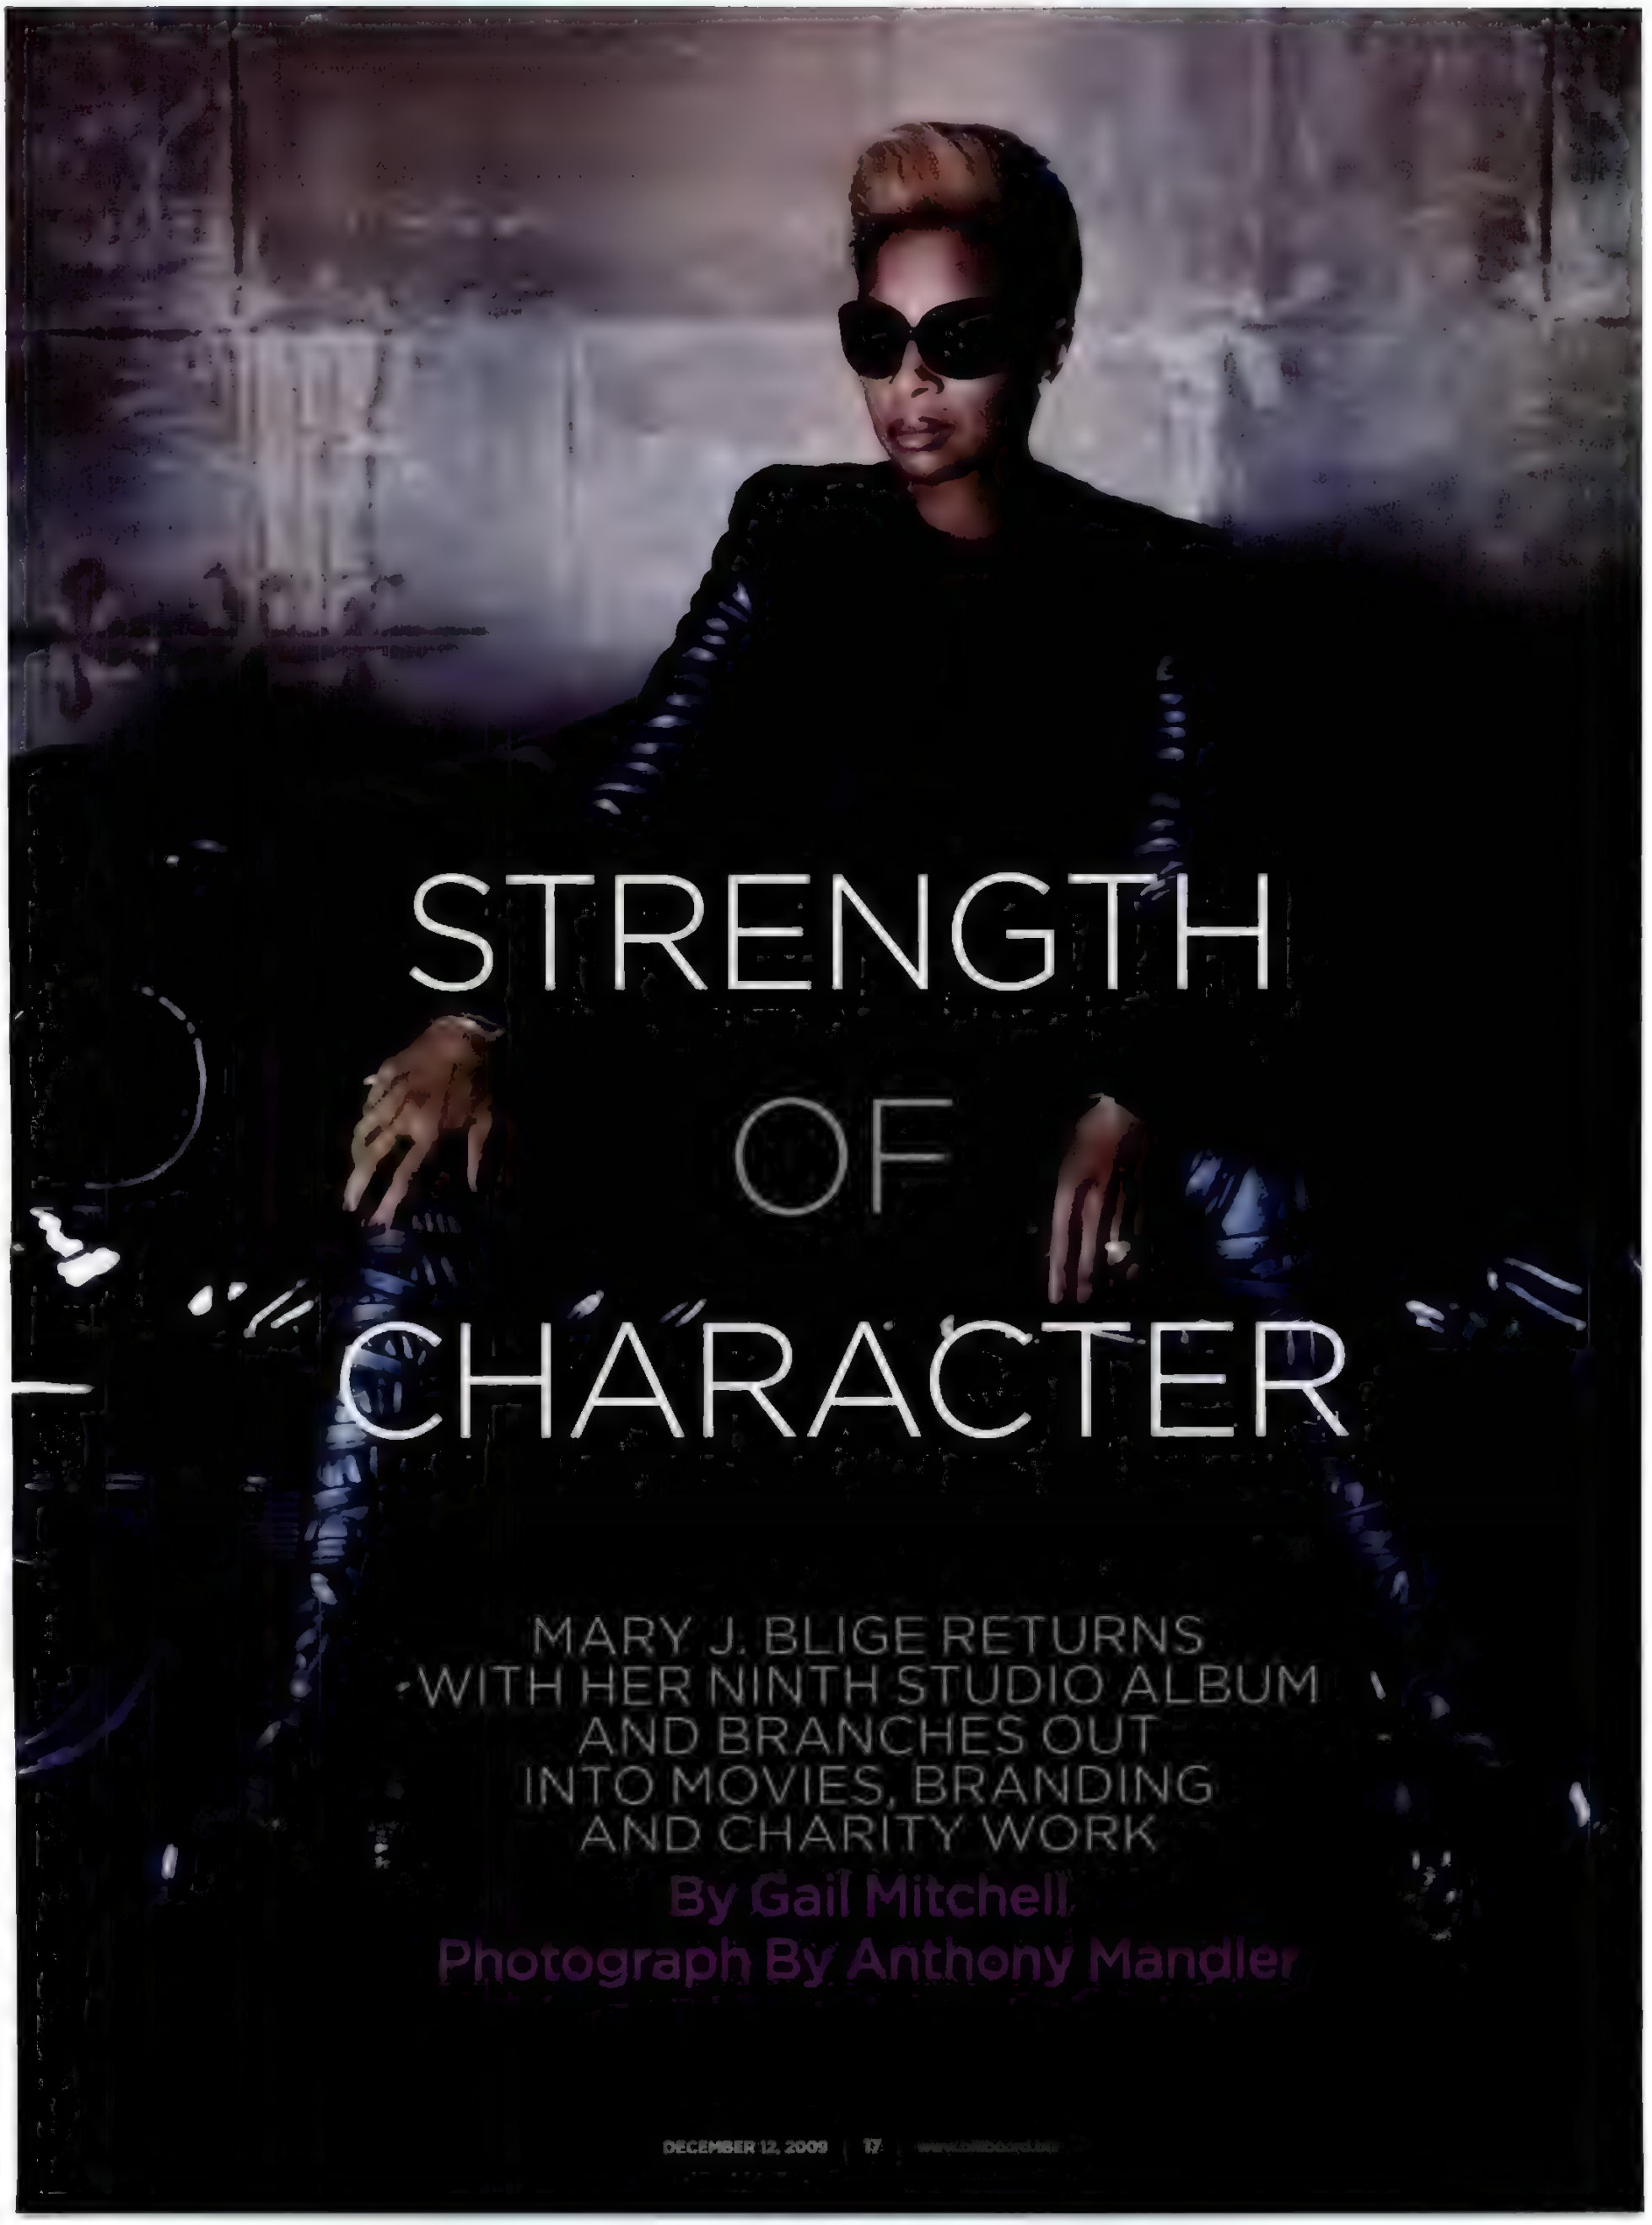
What does the genre need to do overall to elevate digital sales to the level of the broader music market?

Every Christmas helps. Kids come home from college or wherever, and they've given their parents this digital device, an iPod, and then they show them how it works. It opens their eyes to a new world. Look at Lady Antebellum's single sales: "Need You Now" was No. 1 on the overall iTunes chart. They were absolutely astronomical sales.

What digital or social media platforms have been effective for you?

We take a run at all of them. And obviously not all of them work, but we're aggressive on that front, as are our artists. Lady Antebellum is a great example of a shift in country music. When you sign a younger artist, because of their generation—that social osmosis—they're already engaged in the digital world. They're already making their own videos and putting them up on every social network possible, long before they have a record deal. They're building a fan base on their own, long before having a record deal. When you engage with younger artists, that's what you get.

Are there any challenges in promoting acts as different as Trace Adkins and Lady Antebellum?



The challenge is getting through the gatekeepers anytime you put something in front of them that's slightly different. There was a great deal of skepticism about Darius. It wasn't that he was a black man, but because he was the lead singer in a band that was so big, it was almost a joke. The comments I got from program directors were that "it's going to take the greatest song in the world for me to play a Darius Rucker record on a country radio station." But the minute we went out with Darius and visited them, they converted immediately. And now, I dare say he feels like a staple in the format.

I was never a Hootie fan, but I recognized that this guy had a very unique voice, and every time I'd see that band on television, he felt like a country singer to me. And it's funny because the stuff that he brought to the table—a lot of them were on cassettes—[was] very, very country, too country for our radio format, so we had to adjust to each other. About half the songs were Texas two-step shuffles—I told him that George Strait can't even get those played. The other half were Vern Gosdin-style, "tear in your beer" ballads. They're all great. He jokes with me that one of these days he's going to make a record of nothing but that stuff.

The CMA will be conducting a consumer research study for the second year in a row. Is there anything in particular that it's hoping to learn from its next study?

We're driving down into a younger audience and seeing what their lifestyle patterns are. We've learned a tremendous amount from [Arbitron's] Portable People Meter in major markets. We're finding out that people don't listen to country radio as long as they said they did under the diary system. But we're finding that a lot more people than we'd ever dreamed of listen to us on a regular basis. People are pushing buttons on the radio like crazy, and country is definitely in their mix. ••••

STRENGTH OF CHARACTER

MARY J. BLIGE RETURNS WITH HER NINTH STUDIO ALBUM AND BRANCHES OUT INTO MOVIES, BRANDING AND CHARITY WORK

By Gail Mitchell

Photograph By Anthony Mandler

On the chorus of her latest single, "I Am," Mary J. Blige sings in her riveting voice, "Ain't nobody gonna touch you better . . . more than I am." Since breaking through with her first R&B charting single and first No. 1 in 1992, "You Remind Me," no one has touched fans' inner emotions quite like Blige. ¶ Nearly 20 years later, that emotional connection shows no signs of fraying. The nine-time Grammy Award-winning singer/songwriter—who has earned such sobriquets along the way as "the Queen of Hip-Hop Soul" and "the Empress of Soul"—returns Dec. 21 with her ninth studio album, "Stronger" (Matriarch/Geffen/Interscope). Produced and co-written by Stargate, "I Am" debuted at No. 46 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart. Not only was the bow the singer's best start since 2007, it marked her 17th top 50 debut as a lead artist—the most by a female—and her 59th appearance overall among women, second only to the Queen of Soul herself, Aretha Franklin (99). ¶ "You never want to say the words 'It's a perfect song,' " Interscope marketing chief Steve Berman says about the single, which is No. 39 this week on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. "But I believe this song is as close as you get. Given the positive response it's received thus far, once it fully penetrates, we will have a great long run with it." ¶ In addition to Stargate, Blige enlisted the production and songwriting talent of Ryan Leslie, Polow Da Don, the Runners, Ne-Yo, Akon, Bryan-Michael Cox, Rodney Jerkins, the Stereotypes, D'Mile and Geffen chairman Ron Fair. Guests on the set include Trey Songz, Drake (the previously released track "The One") and T.I. Appearing as a bonus song on the album is the title track, a previously issued single from the "More Than a Game" soundtrack. ¶ Universal Motown singer/songwriter/producer Leslie calls working with Blige for the first time "one of the most inspiring and magical experiences in my career. She's a writer with her own perspective—'This is what the music sounds like and what it's saying to me'—who is just as comfortable knocking a verse out as she is knocking out her vocal in the booth."

On the heels of performing "I Am" at the Nov. 22 American Music Awards, Blige is gearing up for a series of performances. Following her Nov. 24 appearance on "Lopez Tonight" and a Nov. 30 stop on "The Oprah Winfrey Show," fans will be able to catch Blige on "The Jay Leno Show" (Dec. 17), "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" (Dec. 18), the "Christmas in Washington" special with President Barack Obama and first lady Michelle Obama (Dec. 20), "Today" (Dec. 22) and "The View" (Dec. 23). On the retail front, Blige taped an episode for Wal-Mart's Soundstage promotion.

Blige the artist is also busy ramping up her evolution into Blige the entrepreneur. Her Matriarch Records recently released the original motion picture soundtrack to the critically acclaimed Lee Daniels film, "Precious." In addition to co-writing a song specifically commissioned for the soundtrack with Raphael Saadiq, the moving "I Can See in Color," Blige doubled as executive producer on the set, which features previously recorded tracks by Jean Carn, Queen Latifah and Labelle.

In the meantime, Blige and her manager and husband, Kendu Isaacs, are launching Matriarch Entertainment to develop TV and film projects. In that realm, Blige will work in tandem with William Morris Endeavor (WME), with whom the singer has signed for representation. Blige's previous acting roles include "The Ghost Whisperer," "Entourage" and, most recently, Tyler Perry's "I Can Do Bad All by Myself."

Two Blige product lines are rolling out in the coming year: her Melodies line of sunglasses in association with Geffen/Interscope and the My Life fragrance through her partnership in the Brooklyn-based natural beauty products company Carol's Daughter. But beyond music and her burgeoning roles as a businesswoman and actress/producer, it's Blige's work with FFAWN (the Foundation for the Advancement of Women Now) and the recent opening of the first Mary J. Blige Center for Women in her hometown of Yonkers, N.Y., that really stokes her fiery passion.

What was your mind-set when you began workin on "Stronger"?
I always say that whatever doesn't kill you makes you stronger. honestly believe that. And I'm the type of celebrity who can't n talk about the trials I've been through. No matter how successf you become, you always end up finding out there's something i you that needs to be purged. You hit a valley, another trial. It hur so bad that you have to go through something like this again.

But people are people, and you will have to go through thing as long as you live on planet Earth. When you go through thes situations, it's what you learn about yourself that gets you o of them as well as the responsibility you take about that parti ular lesson. And once you come out of that, you're definitely stronger individual than you were before. The strength in th is learning how to forgive and move on. That's a serious lesso As is learning how to love yourself even more to another leve where you don't expect or need anybody to make you feel goo about yourself. That's why I named the album "Stronger." That what I had to learn from this trial I was in, another self-love tria

Was there anything in particular that set this trial in motio
I don't want to go into any details about that. But I do have da when I'll run around like my life is over. And what makes m happy is when I can come out of those situations feeling lik I've learned something.

How would you describe your evolution as singer/songwriter from 1992 until now?
Each and every time, I gain more wisdom about speaking fro every place I learn from. There's really no difference. It's ju me continuing to grow.

Speaking of which, fans may be surprised that you're o of the guests on classical artist Andrea Bocelli's holid album. How did that come about?
He requested me [laughs]. I knew his voice was amazing s said, "Yes, absolutely."

Since you've logged your first soundtrack under yo label, what other projects can we expect from Matriarc
LaNeah [Menzies, who shares a writing credit on "I Can See Color" and on Kanye West's "Love Lockdown"] has joined t Matriarch roster, with her debut album slated for spring 201 Other than that, we're trying to wrap up a few deals with se eral more artists. I don't want to share too much about that un everything is signed.

BLIGE UNVEILS DETAILS OF HER SUNGLASSES LINE AND NINA SIMONE MOVIE PROJECT

Mary J. Blige fans will be able to rock the singer/songwriter's distinctive style when her Melody line of sunglasses rolls out in the spring. The Blige-designed line is a partnership between the Geffen/Interscope artist and her label, headed by chairman Jimmy Iovine.

The Blige/Interscope brand pairing is reminiscent of Iovine's other high-profile partnership: Beats by Dre with Interscope artist/producer Dr. Dre. That audio company's product line includes the Beats by Dre headphones and Lady Gaga's Heartbeats earbuds.

"This isn't about getting a product and sticking someone's name on it," Iovine says. "It's about coming up with something unique that fits the artist—and there aren't that many great, unique ideas. These glasses were completely designed from the ground up with Mary and [Blige's husband and manager, Kendu Isaacs]. And now we'll be working together to market and distribute the glasses. Mary is a great canvas; the three of us plan to execute more ideas together."

One idea is already in motion. Iovine will collaborate with Blige and Isaacs on a biographical fil they're developing under their M triarch Entertainment banner abo legendary singer Nina Simone. Bli earned her first credit as a soun track executive producer for h work on the soundtrack to t movie "Precious." She also co-wro and co-produced an original so for the Lee Daniels/Lionsgate fil "I Can See in Color."

"It's pretty amazing what s does with the song vocally," Lion gate president of music Jay Fair says. "Having worked with Ma now on the 'More Than a Gam soundtrack and Tyler Perry's 'I C Do Bad by Myself,' we'd love the o portunity to work with her on futu material."

Take me as I am: MARY J. BLIGE performs at the 2009 American Music Awards.

ine in the music business for as long as I can remember, asked e what I thought about Carol's Daughter products. I'd already llen in love with the product before that; it was so good. But I'd en searching for the product ever since and could never find it any stores. So when Steve mentioned it to me a couple of years go, I said it was definitely something I'd love to be involved with. o he took what I said to the Carol's Daughter folks and the rest history. I'm now a co-owner of the company, along with Will mith, Jada Pinkett and Jay-Z, as well as its spokesperson.

I also have a perfume line coming out next year under Carol's aughter called My Life. I did all the work, smelling different ents every single day. I put in a lot of time to make this perfume ork because I wanted it to smell like when people compliment e and ask, "What are you wearing, Mary?" So I made a version what it is I wear, trying to figure out what it was that got to them.

o My Life is a combination of what scents?

n basically a flower girl. So it has flowery scents with just a little musk and a tiny bit of wood.

In a separate venture, you also have the Melodies sunglass line coming out.

I don't know if you watched me sing the national anthem on the World Series with the Yankees. But the glasses I wore and then took off are from the Melodies line. I had to put them on display [laughs]. I designed those myself along with the eyeglass designing company [SpyOptics]. It's my version of what I wear. I have a lot of sunglasses that I'm fond of, so I took my favorite pairs and said, "Let's try to figure out something from these." And they figured it out.

Describe what it felt like to open the first Mary J. Blige Center for Women.

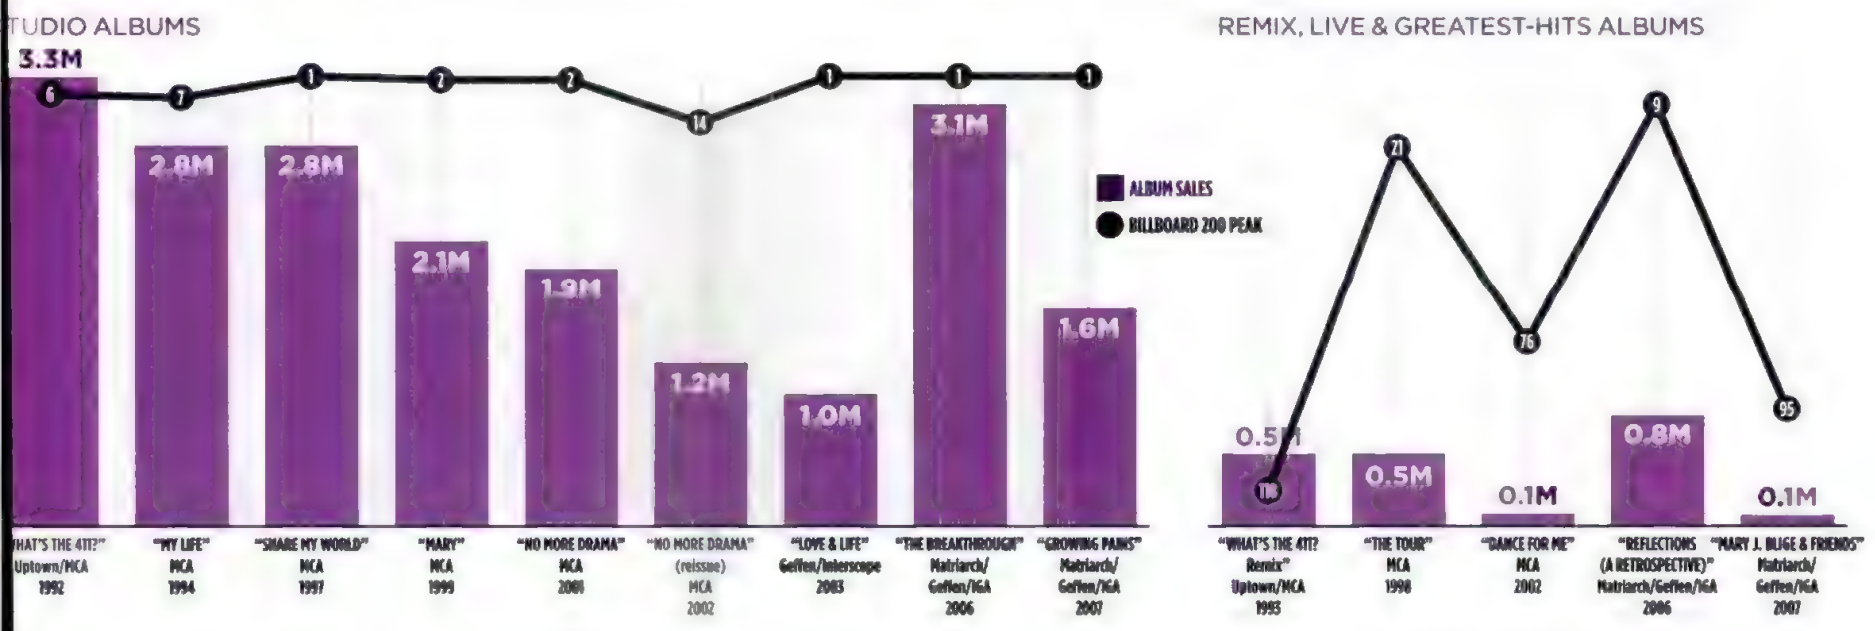
Opening that center is one of my greatest achievements because it's something I've always wanted to do for other women. It's part of the charitable organization I co-founded with Steve Stoute in 2008, Foundation for the Advancement of Women Now. Our initiative is to educate, encourage and empower women. Yonkers is where I grew up and saw women destroyed, both physically and mentally. So this center is beautiful for me because maybe those women's children or their children's children can go there and get help. I'm hoping to see FFAWN and Mary J. Blige Centers all over the world. Outside of music, that's probably the one thing to which I will devote a lot of my time.

During the recent Hollywood Reporter/Billboard Film & TV Conference, you mentioned your ongoing wish to do a biopic about Nina Simone. Is that any closer to happening? What other film and TV projects are you developing?

Yes. WME, [TV/film writer/producer] Cynthia Mort and I are now moving forward on "The Nina Simone Story." It's been a long time coming.

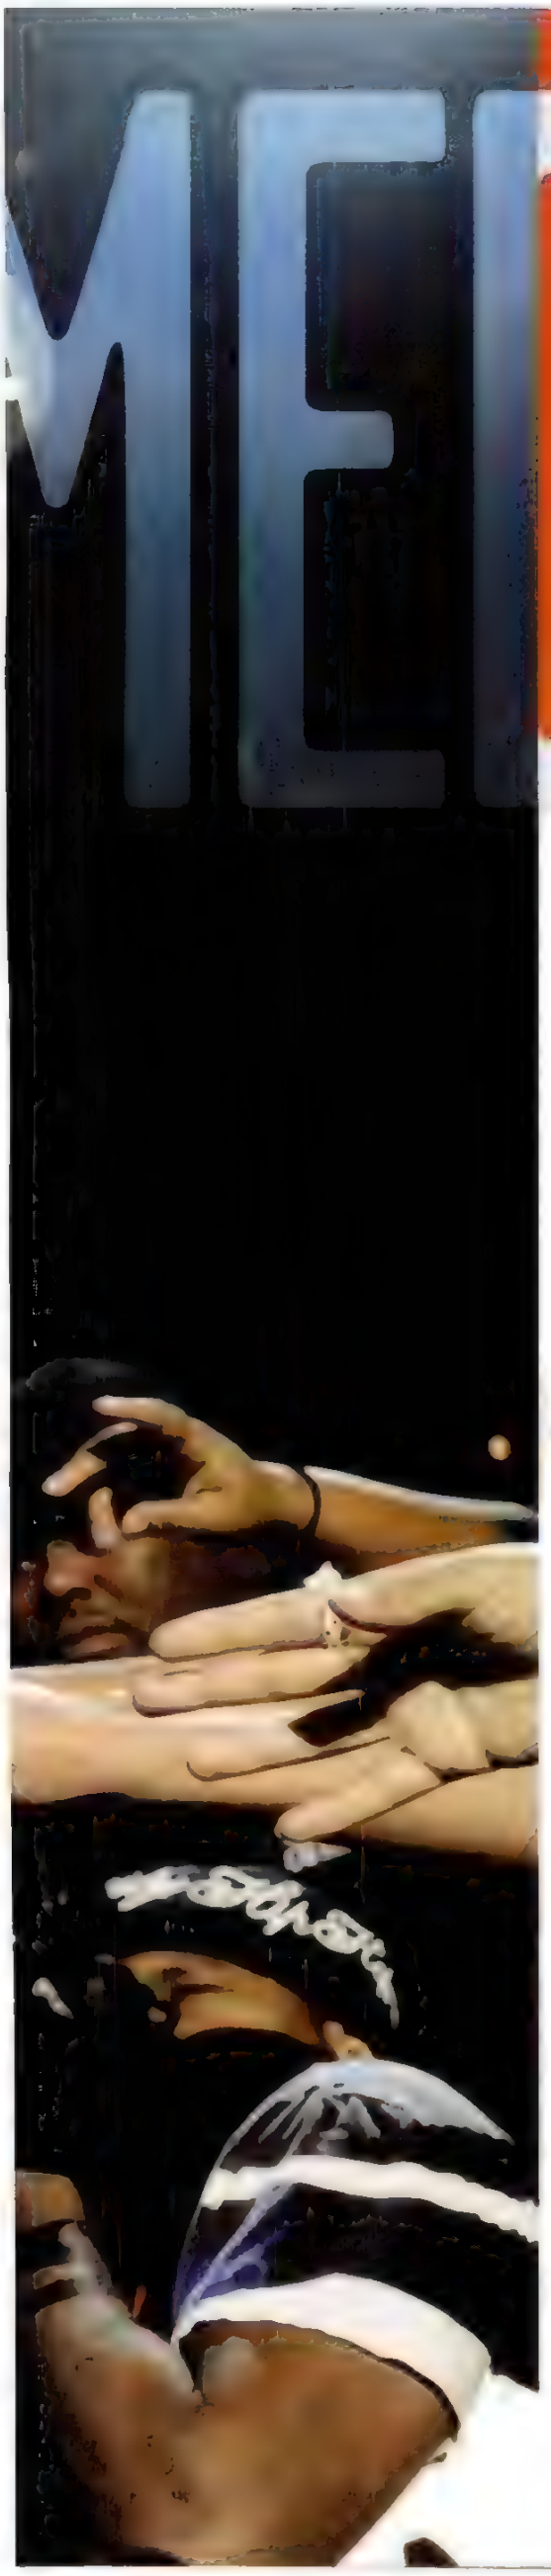
We're also working on a film, which the Lifetime Network just picked up. It's about Betty Shabazz, Malcolm X's wife, and Coretta Scott King, Dr. Martin Luther King's wife, and the lives they led being the women behind such important men. It's really deep: Their lives are different but both women also go through the same things at the same time. I don't want to give away too many details about it, but it's going to be an important film.

So you're eyeing more acting projects?



Working with Cara Lewis and Randy Michelle at WME has been a blessing because they really go out for you and do what they say they're going to do. I have scripts now that they're sending over. There aren't a lot of great parts out there, so they're trying to pick the best material for me. I'm waiting patiently, but you will definitely see me in more films.

After almost 20 years in music, what continues to drive you?



Honestly, it goes back to my fans. I have a responsibility to them and they let me know that it's a responsibility. I read things all the time from them like, "Please keep doing what you doing." Or "I'm listening to 'Growing Pains' right now and it's getting me through my day." It's just the things people say that connect me with their lives . . . that keeps me going.

All this could be gone today or tomorrow if I were to act like I did it all by myself. It's God first and then my fans. They help me do what I'm doing; they're the reason why I am where I am. And I always acknowledge them in that. I've never been the type of person to become full of myself. I've never known how to do that because when we were growing up, if you even showed out a little, someone would try to take you out. So I guess the balance in that is what it taught me: to stay humble and not count all your chickens before they hatch. To just stay on a level where people can relate to you and you can relate to them. ••••

Jive Records Stars R. Kelly And Britney Spears Have Survived PR Nightmares. Can Chris Brown's Publicity Campaign Take Him Back To The Top?

By Mariel Concepcion

Nov. 18 was a typical Hollywood night—the breeze calmly whispered around the congested traffic on the streets.

But on this particular evening, one element of the atmosphere couldn't be forecast. The night marked the return of R&B wunderkind Chris Brown to a California stage for the first time since his February domestic violence dispute with ex-girlfriend Rihanna.

It's a turning point for Brown, the indisputably talented singer and dancer who built a legion of young female fans with his quick smile and catchy music. How Brown and his team at Jive Records—who declined to comment for this story—handle the buildup to the release of his new album, "Grafitti," due Dec. 8, could determine whether he regains the chart clout he held before the incident, or if the grave situation derails a promising career.

Those with experience in crisis public relations—the branch of marketing that by definition requires reactive instead of proactive messaging on a quick deadline—say Brown and Jive have made smart moves since the 20-year-old plead guilty to assault in June, and that careful strategic groundwork could mean a comeback for the singer.

Levick Strategic Communications senior VP Gene Grabowski—who's worked with other celebrities in crisis, including baseball's Roger Clemens—says Brown and his team have taken the necessary steps for a reinvention of Brown's image. "Chris has done three things well, which anyone in his case should do," Grabowski says. "One, he apologized. Two, he's taking the necessary steps to see that it doesn't happen again through counseling and therapy. Usually when you seek the help of others, people empathize with you. Three, he's helping others by giving back to charities."

So far, sales are promising. The new album's first single, "I Can Transform Ya" featuring producer Swizz Beatz and Lil Wayne, reached No. 12 on Billboard's Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart and No. 23 on the Billboard Hot 100, with 240,000 downloads to date, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The second single, "Crawl," isn't yet available digitally.

STAGE SUPPORT

Brown's performance at the Avalon was the third stop as part his Fan Appreciation tour, an intimate performance for those who supported him during a "tough year," as Brown himself puts it. After the guilty plea, Brown was sentenced to five years' probation and more than 1,400 hours of community service. A portion of the proceeds from the concert will go to the Jenesee Center, which aids domestic violence victims, and Best Buddies International, which helps children and adults with developmental disabilities.

Brown's initial return to the stage in October wasn't without controversy. When he headlined New York radio station WWPR's Powerhouse concert, the station wound up giving away two-for-one tickets to the event. (The venue and/or promoters have yet to report the event's attendance to Billboard Boxscore, and WWPR declined to comment.)

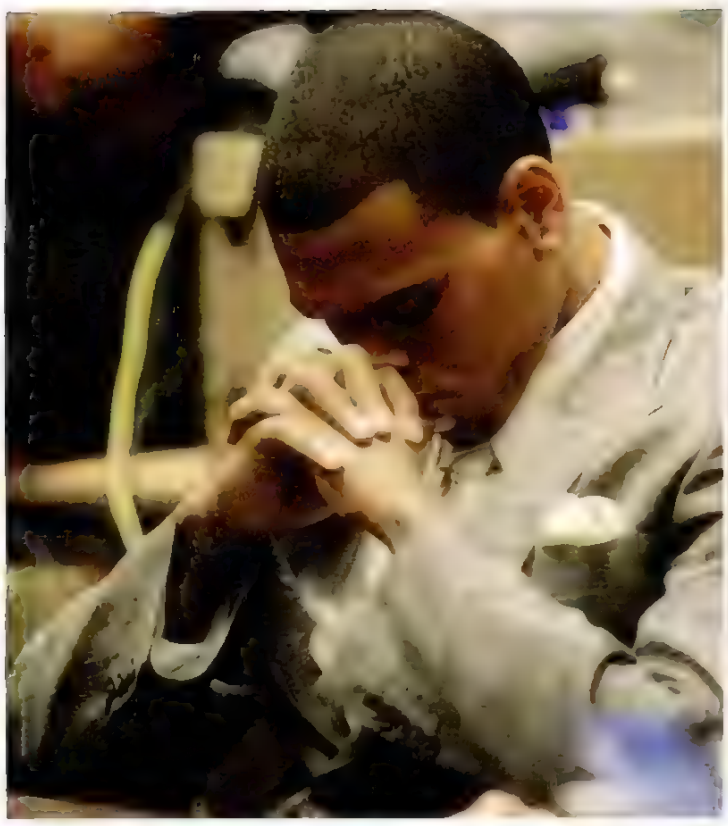
But things looked brighter at the Hollywood stop. The line outside the Avalon extended down the block and wrapped around the corner. People of all ages and ethnicities, including parents who accompanied their underage daughters—some carrying homemade signs that read, "I Love You, Chris"—anxiously awaited the show's start and the Virginia entertainer to hit the stage.

"This tour is a trial balloon for Chris Brown and Jive Records," Grabowski says. "They are doing it in modest-sized venues so the crowds don't look small and so that it looks successful. He's donating the proceeds to two charities, which is smart. The wild card is how well he handles things moving forward. If he handles with grace and humility, he has a good chance of revitalizing his career. Social standards have changed over time and people are conditioned to forgive more easily than in the days of Ike and Tina Turner."

Another notable strategy that Brown's team is adopting that is smart but can be extremely risky, Grabowski notes, is that Brown is "attempting to ride Rihanna's publicity wave. Every time she makes an announcement, he makes one shortly after. She is popular now because she was victimized, but obviously when you talk about her, you think of him, so he is trying to benefit from her publicity."

But all the chess moves in the crisis management PR playbook run the risk of going awry. Adam Kluger, a PR specialist and founder/owner of executive and lifestyle branding company Adam Kluger PR, says that while Jive Records has a track record for saving the careers of troubled artists, like Britney Spears and R. Kelly (see story, page 22), Brown's case may be a bit tricky. "In some genres it gives you street credibility if you are involved in a shooting or if you serve jail time. But for Chris Brown, it goes against his musical personality," he says. "It's difficult to cast yourself as a love figure if you're beating up on those you claim to love."

Grabowski agrees. "R. Kelly won his case and was found not guilty on like 14 counts, which is very helpful. Plus, most of Chris Brown's fan base were girls, I believe, and most women aren't affected close to the heart when it comes to underage sex as opposed to domestic violence," he says.



There are two strategic factors that weigh against Brown as he starts promotion of "Grafitti": one is the immediacy of the incident, and the other is the fame of the victim.

Ebro Darden, PD of WQHT New York—the station that gave Brown his first radio interview after the ordeal took place—says that unlike Brown, Kelly's trial dragged to the point where some—maybe even most—had forgotten about the charges against him. "R. Kelly's controversy was extended because the trial dragged on for years, and during that time, he still managed to get tons of airplay and sell tons of albums."

Brown has no such leeway, as every follow-up court appearance after his plea deal continues to be reported by celebrity news outlet TMZ.

Kluger adds that it didn't help Brown's case that Rihanna is a celebrated artist, while the woman involved in the Kelly allegations was unknown. "[Rihanna] has her own fan base just like Jon and Kate and Brangelina and Jennifer Aniston," he says. "If there's an unknown involved, it just doesn't have the same allure."

SECOND CHANCES

Although Brown hasn't granted many interviews since the incident, there may be a strategic reason for his reticence.

Grabowski feels Brown could've used more practice before his public apology, which included an online video released in July after his guilty plea, in which Brown said that what he did was "inexcusable," and an August interview with CNN's Larry King alongside his mother and lawyer, during which he declared his longstanding love for Rihanna.

Grabowski says that in the aftermath of the event, staying quiet is actually a smart move on Brown's part. "You have to be careful not to overexpose yourself and overapologize. If you overdo it, it can seem transparent," he says.

Lizzie Grubman, founder of Lizzie Grubman PR—who found herself in her own tabloid torment when she drove her sport utility vehicle into a crowd of people outside a Hamptons nightclub in 2001—says Brown has a good chance of revamping his career but will need to do more than apologize to prove he is sorry.

"Chris Brown is giving Rihanna space to let her do most of the speaking, which is a respectable thing to do, but I think he needs to continue to work with charities and do PSAs and educate people on what he did wrong," she says. "America likes to give second chances, so if he can come correct and prove to everybody he is truly sorry and produce an amazing album at that, he will win."

Darden agrees that the music will be Brown's saving grace. "Jive knows that ultimately an artist's relationship with the consumer is based on the music they make, so when controversy happens, you can rebound as an artist if you have great music," he says. "He has an uphill battle to fight, but a hit record is the only thing that can keep him afloat."

Based on the significant digital jumps that Brown's song "Forever" made after appearing on TV and online after his guilty plea, the prediction that good music can keep Brown afloat seems to be accurate.

After being featured in a YouTube wedding video July 19, the song's digital downloads jumped from 3,000 the week ending July 12 to 50,000 the following week, a 1,500% increase.

Digital sales the week ending Oct. 4 were 7,000, but after the song appeared in an episode of NBC's "The Office" they jumped to 32,000 the week ending Oct. 11, a 350% increase.

"Look at [football player] Michael Vick—he did something that was terrible as well, but he has been given another chance," Kluger says. "You have to own up to the mistake and try to rectify. Chris Brown seems to be moving in that direction. I wouldn't put it past him if he has a career resurrection."

Other artists have overcome trouble thanks to the popularity of their music. Shortly after Spears filed for divorce from Kevin Federline, she began a downward spiral, which eventually led her to be put on a psychiatric hold at UCLA Medical Center. But with the 2008 release of "Circus," which has sold 1.6 million copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, Spears is in the midst of a comeback. Her Circus tour has so far grossed nearly $108 million from 77 shows, according to Billboard Boxscore.

A FIRST STEP

If the Avalon stop is any indication, a favorable wind seems to be blowing in Brown's direction.

At around 9:40 p.m. after opening acts Scooter, the Rejects and New Boyz, Brown took the stage before a packed, 1,250-capacity venue to chants of "We want Chris."

While he brought out A-listers 50 Cent and Sean "Diddy" Combs for the New York stop of his 2007 18-stop Exclusive tour, which grossed $11.3 million and had five sellouts, according to Billboard Boxscore, this time he was accompanied by rising stars Keri Hilson and Ester Dean. "Did you all come out to party tonight?" he asked the energized crowd. "First off, I want to say thank you to each and everyone who came out tonight. Without you guys, I would be nothing. Now, let's party."

In the crowd were producer Polow Da Don and representatives from Jenesee Center and Best Buddies International, which he shouted out a number of times during his set.

For those outside the industry, the music remains the message, not Brown's conviction. "I lost some respect for him, but he has apologized and is working to change," said a 16-year-old African-American girl while she gazed at Brown as the singer flashed a smile at the supportive audience. "If he continues to make good music like on his first two albums, I will still bu his music."

"I'm still a fan. Despite what happened, you can't take awa the fact that he's very talented," said a 21-year-old Caucasia male, who got tickets to the show as a birthday gift from hi girlfriend. "All of what's happened to him will become part o his life experiences, which will be ammunition for his musi I don't think his bouncing back to where he was is going to hap pen in an instant, but I think he's going to stand good at th end of the day. I will buy the album when it comes out Dec. 8.

After hiring a grade-A legal team, which Brown clearly did– "He was facing jail time and got off," Grabowski says—th next step toward a full recovery is keeping fans like these i his good graces.

"It's definitely too early to tell, but Jive is making the righ moves," Grabowski says. "We'll just have to wait and see hov fans will respond. The kind of connection he has with fans i the most powerful determination of whether he can come bac or not." ...

EMERGING MARKET

HOW SPOON GOT SIGNED, WAS DROPPED, WENT INDIE, SYNCHED UP WITH JAGUAR, HUNG OUT IN THE OC, KEPT ITS CRED AND STILL MANAGED TO SELL ALBUMS

BY CORTNEY HARDING | PHOTOGRAPHS BY AUTUMN DE WILDE

Spoon frontman Britt Daniel's adopted hometown of Portland, Ore., doesn't sprawl. The city maintains tight limits on local development, creating a boundary around the metro area to try and avoid the congestion and suburban sprawl that plague other cities. The term most often used for this theory is planning: managed growth.

It seems strange to draw a comparison between an indie band's development and an indie city's building permits policy, but in a way, Spoon and Portland embody the theory of managed growth. Neither is wholly resistant to getting bigger; they just want to keep everything in check and make sure the fundamentals stay in place.

While Portland's managed growth has run into some bumps recently, Spoon's slow and steady approach has served it well. Each album the band has released has sold progressively >>> more than previous efforts. According to Nielsen SoundScan, 2001's "Girls Can Tell" has sold slightly less than 100,000, 2002's "Kill the Moonlight" 153,000, 2005's "Gimme Fiction" 215,000 and 2007's "Ga Ga Ga Ga Ga" 315,000. And the band hopes to sell even more when its new release, "Transference," arrives Jan. 19 on Merge.

"Spoon's upward trajectory is pretty unparalleled, and it's all across the board," says Ben Dickey, who has worked with Spoon since 2001 and managed the band since 2005. "It's sales, it's touring, it's synchs. This is a traditionally underground band, and they are not all of a sudden making very commercial records."

Ironically, the band's upward trajectory started after Elektra Records dropped it in 1998. Put out to pasture only four months after the release of its major-label debut, "A Series of Sneaks," failed to sell and the band's A&R man Ron Lafitte quit, Spoon signed to Merge in 2000. It wasn't until 2002, however, when "The Way We Get By," from the album "Kill the Moonlight," appeared on the TV show "The OC" that the tide began to turn.

" 'The Way We Get By' was really the start of things," Dickey says. "It was the first single people identified with; previously, they had been a very album-centric band."

But if "The Way We Get By" lit the fuse, the explosion occurred with the band's next album, "Gimme Fiction."

"The biggest tipping point for Spoon was [the track] 'I Turn My Camera On,' " Dickey says. "That was the song that started to crack radio [although the song never charted], and it started to attract a lot more synchs."

One of those synchs was a Jaguar ad, which started airing in January 2006 in the United States, Canada, Mexico, the United Kingdom, France and Italy. The song also appeared in TV shows like "Veronica Mars," "Bones" and "The Simpsons."

" 'I Turn My Camera On' was really the start of them getting a mainstream audience," Merge co-founder Mac McCaughan says. "And they were smart about how they went about it, because they could have gone crazy after 'Camera.' But the band has always retained tight control over their licensing. They do it on their own terms."

Spoon also overcame any notions it would be a one-hit wonder post-"Camera" with "Ga Ga Ga Ga Ga," which featured the single "The Underdog." The song was also a licensing success, appearing in the film "Cloverfield," as well as TV shows like "How I Met Your Mother" and "Numb3rs." "The Underdog" also cracked the radio charts for the first time in Spoon's career, peaking at No. 3 on Triple A and No. 26 on Alternative. The band rode the wave of success all the way to the stage of "Saturday Night Live," where it performed Oct. 6, 2007.

"The key to each successive record is being able to set it up to reach the new people we are poised to meet," McCaughan says of "Transference." "The visibility is there for the fans; they pay attention, and they know it's coming out. The bigger challenge is to get it into places where people who know them from 'SNL' or hearing them in an ad will find them."

But McCaughan adds that strategy doesn't mean flooding the market. "We are going to get them in as many retailers as it is smart for them to be in," he says. "It makes no sense for us to be in useless markets."

That's why, for instance, the label is targeting Best Buy and Target, but is more wary of Wal-Mart. "Wal-Mart doesn't have a lot of alternative albums, and its music section is shrinking," he says. "We have to be careful not to be haphazard in how we approach this." Dickey adds that many big-box stores already stock Spoon albums. "We sort of snuck in the back door at a lot of these stores and quietly sold there," he says.

Lead singer Daniel says that the band has "a definite plan at retail. It feels like the same thing we've always done, just at warp speed."

That same line of thought extends to the licensing for "Transference."

"This is a band that is willing to license, without question," says Lyle Hysen, head of Bank Robber Music, which handles Spoon's licensing. "But they are also more involved than almost any band I know. Britt is included on every e-mail I send out with a licensing request, and he's part of every conversation and very responsive."

"Any band worth its salt should care about where its music is appearing," Daniel says. "We turned down an ad for Hummer, because every time I see someone driving one, they seem to be saying, 'I don't give a fuck about anyone,' and I didn't want to get behind that. But in terms of movies and TV shows, as long as it's not offensive and high quality, we'll go for it."

But don't expect to hear songs from "Transference" in ads or films just yet. "We're trying to keep the record from leaking at this point," Dickey says. Hysen adds that they're planning a party and show for music supervisors the week of release. "We will get some hits the week the album comes out, for sure," he says.

Spoon's cautious approach is a direct result of its last album leaking almost two months prior to release. "The worst part about a leak is this: You spend all your time talking to everyone involved and putting together a plan, and then a leak just throw a wrench into it," drummer Jim Eno says. "You have to rede everything. Say the second single leaks—well, now radio wil think the song has been around forever."

Eno adds that his goal at this point is to make it hard fo someone to steal the record. The physical copy sent out to media won't play on computers, and digital streams come with stric orders not to leak the track.

"I know it will leak at some point," Eno says. "But ideally, it'l be closer to the day it's supposed to come out. And after all leaks can be positive if you have a good record and people star talking about it."

"Transference" is rawer and dirtier than previous efforts without as much sheen and production. Songs like "Myster Zone" cut off abruptly, leaving listeners to wonder whether thei copies might be defective or if the band just decided to simpl stop playing on a whim. Transitions between tracks are als shorter, and the result is a more angular sound.

Daniel says he wanted to make an album where none of th songs sounded like "The Underdog," and he's managed to suc ceed, all while retaining the signature Spoon sound. "I was wri ing whatever turned me on while we were making the album, he says. "But I look back, and I definitely see a lack of song that follow the verse-chorus-verse-chorus structure."

Eno says that a few of the songs were tracked live, and th band tried not to obsess while making the album.

Despite the fact that "Transference" is arguably less con mercial than other albums, Dickey says he thinks Spoon wi continue to do well at radio. "We haven't started really ap proaching anyone yet, but we have had success in the pas and we have program directors and music directors onboard, he says. In addition to charting with "The Underdog," th track "Don't You Evah" peaked at No. 33 on Alternative an No. 9 on Triple A.

"We will continue to work with stations that support Merg artists, like college radio stations and triple A and [noncom mercial]," McCaughan says. "It's harder to predict how thing will go at commercial rock radio. That said, this album is ver stripped-down and direct, so I think that rock radio will like it

The band is also planning on touring extensively behin "Transference," as it has done with other albums. "They ar going to start off by playing some shows in December and tr ing to get back into people's minds," McCaughan says. "We ar counting on people remembering them and hoping that casu fans see that they have staying power."

Daniel says Spoon will play shows during the week of releas and then spend much of 2010 on the road. "We're going to sta out in Europe and then do the States and the summer fest vals," he says. According to the Official Charts Co., "Ga Ga G Ga Ga" has sold 5,000 copies in the United Kingdom, an "Gimme Fiction" has sold 3,000.

He adds that as Spoon spends more time touring behin each album, the members come to better understand their lim its. "You can totally tour a record for too long," Daniel say "And it can prevent you from coming up with new material. feel like we know when to stop at this point. That said, I lov touring, and I have a lot of fun on the road. The really nice thin about being at this point in our careers is that we have the abi ity to stop doing the things that aren't fun."

Eno says that he doesn't envy young bands at all. "They hav no formula or strategy to do music and make a living anymore he says.

And unlike many young acts, Spoon doesn't have to sper countless hours surfing the Web. While the band has a We site and a MySpace page, the members don't post minute-b minute updates of their lives. "No one makes us do any onlin stuff we don't want to do," says Daniel, who sounds incred lous that some labels would force bands to spend hours on Twi ter. "I do some blogging, I like to talk to fans, but I don't do in any organized or strategic fashion.

"We're in such a sweet spot right now," Daniel says. "I hon estly can't really think of anything to complain about." ••

'Dino'-Mite!

Motion City Soundtrack Gets Ready To Roar On Its Major-Label Debut

After releasing its first two records on indie label Epitaph, pop-punk band Motion City Soundtrack signed a multiple-album deal with Columbia in late 2006, months before releasing its final Epitaph effort, 2007's "Even If It Kills Me." With its Columbia debut, "My Dinosaur Life," set for release Jan. 19, the band's team is working to balance its new major-label status with the independent, grass-roots approach that got Motion City Soundtrack its start.

Manager Doug Lefrak says that while Epitaph has always been a great partner, Columbia offers the group the opportunity to go further. "In the long term, the feeling was that at some point we'd want a larger set of resources and a larger team of people that could help us take all that groundwork and continue to expand it," he says.

Even though the signing was done while the band was still under contract with Epitaph, guitarist Joshua Cain says it seemed like a logical next step. "Knowing how things change so fast and having no idea how the next record would do on Epitaph, it just felt right to make the move when there was the right interest there," he says. "This feels like a big machine that can work really well toward the goals we have at this point. Because we're not a new band, we don't need the [initial] development phase, but we need the development phase on the bigger side."

Columbia director of marketing Nina Webb says she hopes "Dinosaur" will nudge Motion City Soundtrack out of its pigeonhole as a "Vans Warped tour band."

"With a band like this that's kind of been the kings of the Warped tour, it's always the challenge of getting the next step higher," she says. "One of the challenges is making sure people realize that this is not just another emo-punk band. This is a sophisticated band that should be in the same category as Weezer, Jimmy Eat World, Blink-182 and those type of artists."

Because of this, Webb says it's perfect that the band will support Weezer on several dates in December and January. The group will go out on a headlining tour starting in late January, covering the United States, Australia, Japan and the United Kingdom in the first three months following the album release. Motion City also has three sold-out Chicago shows in mid-December, each of which will feature one of the band's Epitaph records in full. "It's kind of our holiday, coming-back moment for being on and off so much in the last year," Cain says.

There's already an album preorder under way on the band's Web site, and fans who opt for the $60 deluxe version will receive five bonus tracks, a hard-bound book with six 7-inch picture discs, a signed lyric booklet and album artwork for each song by Joe Ledbetter. There is also a digital deluxe edition, which includes the bonus tracks and the artwork in PDF form, Webb says. The album's first single, "Her Words Destroyed My Planet," is being serviced to modern rock radio, and the track "Disappear" and an accompanying video were already released to fans online.

Along with the more traditional marketing campaign, Motion City also took a grass-roots approach to reach its diehard fans: Throughout November, frontman Justin Pierre traveled with the band's tour manager and a friend on a tour they called On the Dino Trail, during which Pierre made appearances and played acoustic shows throughout the Midwest and East Coast. Webb says much of the spontaneous itinerary was planned with fans' help through Twitter, and all of it was chronicled on MyDinosaurLife.com. "Justin is a rare breed where he is charismatic and entertaining, but does not have an ego," Webb says. "He's happy if he's playing in front of 10 people or 5,000. It's been really great and I think fans are really surprised by it." Lefrak says he's hoping that a Western run of the tour is also in the cards.

Cain says Twitter has been the biggest change in the band's relationship with its fans, which used to be handled online through instant messaging and e-mail. "I feel like in the last few years, that stuff's gotten harder to do," he says. "[Twitter has] really re-engaged us as a band to be able to communicate with everybody."

Columbia may be new to the Motion City Soundtrack business, but Webb wants to make it clear that the label isn't trying to change the band. "Nothing's broken here," she says. "We want to just help support it and show everybody who this band is and keep them exactly who they are." ••••

The Circus Comes To Town

Phil Vassar Involves The Whole Crowd On His New Album

From recording with his band, rather than as a solo artist, to recruiting young talent to craft his new video, Phil Vassar sought to involve the community with his new Universal South album, "Traveling Circus," due Dec. 15.

"Business as usual just doesn't exist anymore," Vassar says. "I'm so over the glamour-shot album cover and same producers and same musicians on every record. It just all sounds the same to me. So I thought it would be fun to get some different folks on the record."

In addition to using his band on the new album, Vassar recruited recent graduates of Orlando, Fla.'s Full Sail University to create the video for his new single, "Everywhere I Go." "The guys who did the video are just so green. These guys are 22 or 23, just getting out of school," Vassar says. "It's a really cool approach and the thing looks great. I'm trying to figure out why [previous] video guys were charging me $100,000 a year and they could do it for $40,000."

The Virginia native first made a name for himself in Nashville as a songwriter, penning hits for Tim McGraw, Jo Dee Messina, Collin Raye, Alan Jackson and others. In 1999, he was named ASCAP's country songwriter of the year and soon signed with Arista and began scoring hits of his own.

He either wrote or co-wrote everything on the new album, including the personal, vulnerable "A Year From Now." "As an artist, I think you are doing yourself a disservice if you don't take the opportunity to sort of write about things that are good, bad and ugly," he says, referring to his recent divorce. " 'A Year From Now' was a hard song to write, but I think that you can surely tell that I mean it."

Vassar had used his band to record a couple of new songs for his greatest-hits package, but "Traveling Circus," his sixth studio album, marks the first time he and the musicians recorded an entire project. "It's a real raw-sounding album. It was just a lot of fun," says Vassar, who self-produced the record.

Universal South senior VP of sales and operations Van Fletcher says the label has high expectations for the album. "The music on this album represents the most honest and personal Phil Vassar release that he has ever recorded," Fletcher says.

To create awareness, the label plans to place ads in circulars as well as buy TV spots in December and January. There will be "win it before you can buy it" contests at radio and stations are being serviced with liners. Fans who purchase the CD will get a free download of the video for "Bobbi With an I," which features "Desperate Housewives" star James Denton.

Vassar will perform U.S. dates in December and will head to Europe for shows in January. "I've always wanted to do it," he says of playing Europe for the first time. "I'm going back in June for two weeks and then back in November. I'm excited. I'm going to rock that place."

Vassar has also signed on to write songs for an upcoming play based on the 2007 film "Waitress," which starred Keri Russell. "It's a really cool movie, and they are taking it to Broadway," he says. "I'm writing the songs, so I'm in the middle of that. It's just been crazy." ••••

PLANET HOLLYWOOD

James Horner's Score For 'Avatar' Combines A Love Story, Aliens—And Leona Lewis

It's been 12 years since director James Cameron and composer James Horner worked together on "Titanic." The highest-grossing film of all time earned $1.8 billion at the global box office, according to BoxOfficeMojo.com; sold 10.1 million copies of the score, according to Nielsen SoundScan; and propelled Celine Dion's closing-credits track, "My Heart Will Go On," to an Academy Award for best song and a thousand misguided karaoke sessions.

So when Cameron called Horner two years ago and told him that he wanted to collaborate on another film—but that Horner had to stop work on all his other projects in the interim and dedicate 100% of his time to the movie—he willingly signed up.

"It was going to be pretty massive," Horner says. "He said, 'You won't be able to handle it and anything else at the same time.' "

The film, "Avatar," is due Dec. 18 from 20th Century Fox and stars Sam Worthington, Zoe Saldana and Cameron's muse, Sigourney Weaver. Much like the prerelease buzz on "Titanic," "Avatar" is taking some knocks for being too costly, too long and just too damn weird, with painstakingly intricate computer-generated blue aliens as the main characters.

But Horner says that again the scope of Cameron's vision will prove doubters wrong. The soundtrack, which will be released Dec. 15 on Atlantic, is the result of Cameron creating the futuristic society that's the setting of the film—and Horner dreaming up the type of music that the planet's non-human population would listen to.

"The kind of music he wants and how emotional he wants it to get was extraordinarily difficult to achieve," says Horner, a five-time Oscar nominee for original score and winner for original score and song for his contributions to "Titanic." "I've never worked on a score as complicated as this one."

But lest things get too esoteric, much like "Titanic," the album gets diva lung power with Leona Lewis singing the end-credit song, "I See You (Theme From Avatar)." The song was produced by Horner and Simon Franglen, who also produced "My Heart Will Go On."

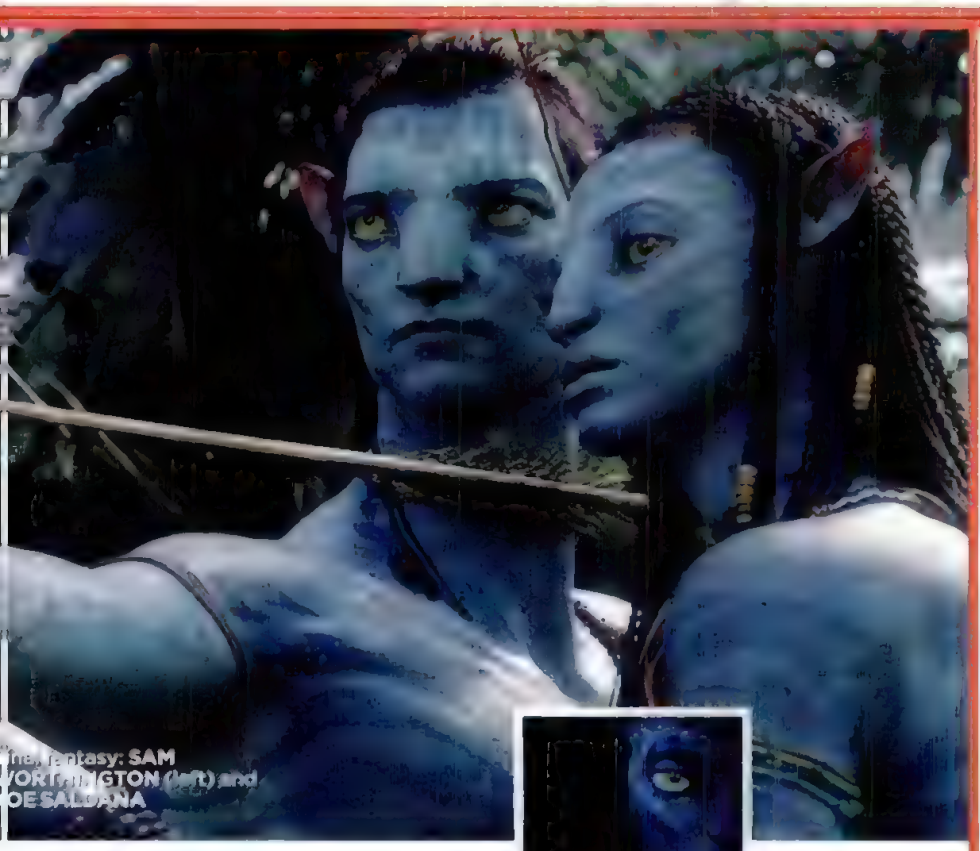
Pop quiz: Name the only international act ever to debut at No. 1 on the official singles chart for the Belgian region of Flanders.

Forget Madonna, Eminem or Lady Gaga—the proud owners of that accolade are U.K. alternative act Editors, who went straight to the summit of the Ultratop chart in September with "Papillon," the lead single from their third album, "In This Light and on This Evening."

The album marks a change in musical direction for the four-piece band, which has eschewed the guitar rock of its first two releases, 2005's "The Back Room" and 2007's "An End Has a Start," for a more electronic sound.

Editors singer Tom Smith says that outside Belgium, the new sound has alienated a number of fans.

"Some people are shocked and think it sounds like a different band," he says. "But for us to go somewhere new and stretch ourselves felt like the most natural thing in the world."



And, in truth, it's a logical progression. After the Joy Division-influenced gloom rock of the first two records, Editors' newfound love of synthesizers and drum machines has echoes of New Order, adding real groove to tracks like "Bricks and Mortar" and "Eat Raw Meat = Blood Drool."

The change also found favor with U.K. record buyers. The album went straight to No. 1 on the Official Charts Co.'s (OCC) albums list after its Oct. 12 release on indie label Kitchenware.

"That was a really nice surprise," Smith says. "To be in the game for three records and have people still interested in what we're doing is an amazing feeling."

The new album has sold 54,000 copies, according to the OCC, while "The Back Room" has moved 523,000 and "An End Has a Start" 335,000.

Editors are licensed to PIAS for Europe and Sony for the rest of the world, but the album makes its U.S. bow Jan. 19 on New York-based indie Fader. Fader handled the U.S. release of "The Back Room," which sold 63,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan, allowing its successor to b

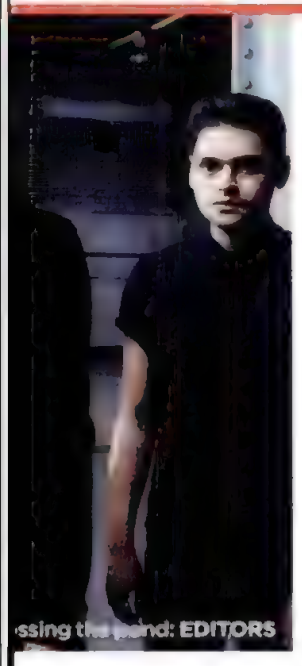
Atlantic Records chairman/CEO Craig Kallman got the soundtrack—"He had pursued it heavily since last spring," says James Lopez, senior VP of marketing/brand partnerships at Atlantic. "The song came about in the past month. We're all running at breakneck speed."



Much like "My Heart Will Go On," "I See You" incorporates sonic themes from Horner's score. "It will be very familiar by the time the movie ends and the song comes on," Lopez says.

While specific deals haven't yet been finalized, Lopez says the rollout for the soundtrack will take place in three phases: First, the song was streamed online during the first week of December; the following week, the album will be streamed in its entirety; finally, the week "Avatar" is released in theaters, the video will be released online.

There's another similarity between "Avatar" and "Titanic," Horner says: Despite the spectacle of the films, they're both love stories at the core.

"I was always pushing [Cameron] never to lose sight of the heart," he says. "I was like the female onboard: 'Remember the girls that want to go see this and may want to go see it twice.' That is where the music plays its most important role, constantly reminding you that there's this two-person relationship driving the whole inside of the story." ••••

"We were really happy with the setup of ["The Back Room"]," says the band's co-manager Rob Whitaker, of Birmingham-based Zoot Music. "So we're glad to be using the same team."

Fader CEO Jon Cohen is optimistic that his label can return the band's stateside career to an upward trajectory.

"The new sound is going to go over really well here," he says. "But this is the kind of record people need to spend time with. The first two records had some more obvious straight-ahead pop music . . . this one's more challenging."

"Papillon" is being worked to college and alternative radio. Some U.S.-specific remixes are due in early 2010—a tactic that proved successful in Belgium, where three versions of the song, including an acoustic take and a mix by Dutch dance DJ Tiësto, all attracted considerable airplay.

Meanwhile, Smith is relishing the prospect of playing some U.S. shows in February, booked by William Morris Endeavor Entertainment.

"Our music's never been particularly British," he says. "We'll go out there and get amongst it. Our fan base has been building step by step with every record. It'd be nice if America could follow suit." ••••

6 QUESTIONS with ELVIS COSTELLO

by CORTNEY HARDING

Elvis Costello needs no introduction. If you're unfamiliar with his body of work, put down this magazine and make a beeline to your nearest record store or download emporium. The British singer/songwriter, who swept through the London pub scene, the punk movement and the New Wave fad while retaining his signature sound continues to release great work 30-plus years in. His latest project, the country- and folk-inflected "Secret, Profane, and Sugarcane," arrived June 9 on Hear Music.

As if being a music legend wasn't enough, Costello is also determined to make his mark on TV; his show, "Spectacle," blends music and interviews with superstars and up-and-comers. A DVD of the first season was released Nov. 17, and the second season premieres Dec. 9 on the Sundance Channel.

1 How do you curate the shows and decide on the guests?
Well, of course you can make a wish list, but even though you can theorize all you want, you've got to get people into the theater. After that, I think the most important thing is contrast. You need people who are more gently spoken together with people who can really grab you by the throat. It's not a bad thing to also have people who have a broad popular appeal and don't often get to play in intimate settings.

2 You hold your own as an interviewer against big personalities like Bono and former President Bill Clinton. How did you prepare to interview these people?
With someone like Bono, at one time, I was on top of the bill and he was just coming up. And all of sudden he got on a rocket ship and just took off, and his music was just designed for such huge, wide spaces. But he's still a human being with anxieties and insecurities. On the show, Bono talks about being in the company of Frank Sinatra and realizing that he was in a heavyweight league.

When I talked to Clinton, we mainly talked about music, but I did ask him one very serious question, about whether he consulted music when he was faced with a difficult policy decision. And I could see the impact that question had was different than him just reminiscing about music, and I felt like I had been sparring with Muhammad Ali and just laid a glove on him.

3 Were you influenced by any particular music shows or talk shows when you started putting "Spectacle" together?
I didn't really have a model for the show in my head; I just wanted to pull together all the things that interested me. I see myself as being like a carnival barker or the MC of a big package show.

4 Are you planning on doing any other TV, given the success of "Spectacle"? Maybe visiting "Colbert Christmas" or "30 Rock"?
I think "30 Rock" is on hiatus right now, but I'd be more than happy to reprise my roll as an international art thief [laughs]. I've carried a Screen Actors Guild card for a number of years, but I don't think of myself as an actor. I wouldn't mind doing something where I am given the responsibility of being a character—usually I'm just asked to be a guitar player with glasses.

5 Are you working on any new music at the moment?
I'm always writing. I'm not recording anything right now because I just finished touring. I was in Australia four weeks ago playing shows, and then I went to Toronto to do the last show of the season [for "Spectacle"], and I've been in New York working on the edits ever since.

6 In 2004, you put a line on the back of your CD "The Delivery Man" stating that you didn't endorse the FBI anti-piracy warning on the back of albums. What did you mean when you made that statement?
My issue with having a government agency stamp on creative work is that it just goes against my nature. I won't carry an ID card, because people actually lost their lives so that we don't have to carry ID cards.

And I'm not really big on government institutions putting stamps on works of art. The problem is much more complex than all of that, and my issue is that it's just like the patient is bleeding from a number of wounds and you just put a [bandage] on this one thing—and it has a big FBI sticker on it and that's supposed to make people feel better?

It's like suing one or two people for downloading. If you really want to go after it, you go after the file-sharing institutions, because they're also the conduits for child porn. So why don't you go after them? Just go and close them down. You know, it's a half-assed thing, that's what my problem with it is. It's the wrong enemy. ••••

KID SISTER

Ultraviolet
Producers: various
Release Date: Nov. 17

Kid Sister may be something of a one-trick pony, but fortunately that one trick is totally unique to her—a high-energy, syncopated rap style that's as simultaneously cute and husky as a Miley Cyrus single. Her often-delayed, multiple-producer debut album (overseen by A-Trak) comes more than two years after her breakthrough single, "Pro Nails," a thumping collaboration with Kanye West. That track is included on "Ultraviolet," along with 11 other instances of old-school Chicago-style rap and house melding together in decidedly not-so-nostalgic ways. On the declarative opener "Right Hand Hi" (produced by tastemaking dance music DJs Steve Angello and Sebastian Ingrosso), Kid Sister drops Missy Elliott-esque rhymes over humming, trance-like synths that pulsate in breakbeat style. Other standouts include the frenetic, techno-tinged "Switch Board" and the new wave styling of "Get Fresh." After 20-something years of rap and dance running in mostly parallel lines, Kid Sister's imagining of their intersection is fresh and unapologetically fun.—KM

RAKIM

The Seventh Seal
Producers: various
Ra Records/Tuscan Villa/SMC Recordings
Release Date: Nov. 17

Despite it being nearly 10 years since his last album, Rakim proves he's still in top lyrical form on his third solo set, "The Seventh Seal." On the single "Holy Are You," he makes biblical references atop the Electric Prunes' 1968 sample of the same title, rapping, "Trace this style to the roots of Genesis/The world wonder/I'm still standing like pyramids." Later, over a basic tambourine and electric guitar production, Rakim schools other artists about the art of rap on "How to Emcee." Standouts on the album include "Man Above," with piano influence from Dr. Dre's "Still D.R.E.," and "You and I," which features flute vibrations. But much like the synth-driven beat on "Holy Are You," some elements on "The Seventh Seal" seem dated. "Message in the Song" includes a lifeless singer on the chorus, while "Satisfaction Guaranteed" has an unappreciated chipmunk-sounding voice looped into the beat. Overall, the God MC can still carry the throne as one of the greatest rappers of all time, but he'll need stronger production the next time around.—MC

GUCCI MANE

The State Vs. Radric Davis
Producers: various Asylum Records/Warner Bros.
Release Date: Dec. 8

If Gucci Mane's new album, "The State Vs. Radric Davis," were a holiday, it would be Halloween. Over a daunting, organ-like piano on the track "Heavy," the Atlanta rapper wittily rhymes, "I just got out of jail, yeah, they tried to Michael Vick me." Similar to something heard in a horror film, the song "Gingerbread Man" features OJ Da Juiceman's habitual "Eys!" over a grand piano scheme and clinging xylophones. And Soulja Boy and Waka Flocka Flame are featured on "Bingo," which boasts a double-speed beat ideal for any scary movie. Even the ladies' track "I Think I'm in Love," on which Gucci discovers he and his love interest are falling for each other, features an eerie Zaytoven production beneath it. However, like the singles "Spotlight" and "Wasted," the songs on the album that jump out most aren't the ones with creepy rhythms, but those with Gucci Mane's witty lyrical delivery. The comical "Lemonade" is about diamond-encrusted jewelry, while "My Own Worst Enemy" talks about the day he was almost murdered.—MC

SHAKIRA

She Wolf
Producers: various
Release Date: Nov. 23

With plenty of moans, guitars, doumbek, disco, clarinet and synth, Shakira's newest album, "She Wolf," is a grab bag of influences, ranging from pop rock to world music to '80s R&B. The result is certainly more adventurous than anything from her peers, if a little forced. Highlights include an ingenious mix of mandolin, banjo, sitar and tabla on "Gypsy," the closest thing to an acoustic song on the album, and "Why Wait," with its relentless synth punctuated by a badass Middle Eastern string section straight from Led Zeppelin's "Kashmir." The bonus tracks, for which the album's U.S. version was previously delayed, don't add much. The Timbaland-produced "Give It Up to Me" has Shakira telling Lil Wayne, "Put me in a cage and lock me away and I'll play the games that you want me to play." Just as you'd say to a friend with an unworthy partner, you want to tell Shakira: You can do better.—ABY

ONEREPUBLIC

Producer: Ryan Tedder
Mosely/Interscope
Release Date: Nov. 17

OneRepublic has recharged its sound with its second album, "Waking Up." The new set finds the band turning out irresistible instrumentals and ultra-catchy vocal chants that enliven its radio-friendly rock sound. The first single, "All the Right Moves," melds scratchy drums with a sweeping mix of cello and piano in a nod to industry politics. During "Secrets," OneRepublic frontman Ryan Tedder defends his in-demand songwriting abilities when he sings, "This time, don't need another perfect line/Don't care if critics never jump in line." He's more optimistic on "Good Life," an uplifting pop gem complete with whistles and lighthearted marching drums. "Waking Up" boasts enough intertwining pop melodies backed with anthemic vocals to show fans of the 2007 Timbaland-remixed track "Apologize" that OneRepublic can deliver more addictive hooks while still maintaining its own graceful and introspective sound.—KP

ROBBIE WILLIAMS

Reality Killed the Video Star Producer: Trevor Horn
Astralwerks
Release Date: Nov. 17

The United States may not even have noticed he's been away, but there's been a Robbie Williams-shaped hole in the rest of the world's pop landscape since his experimental last album, "Rudebox," flopped in 2006. On his newest effort, "Reality Killed the Video Star," such lyrics as "Get the message to the troubadour/The world don't love you anymore" may suggest that "Rudebox" is still preying on Williams' mind. But musically, it's never happened. Instead, he offers string-drenched ballads ("Morning Sun"), slick George Michael-style electronic dance-pop ("Starstruck," "Last Days of Disco"), Elvis Costello-esque clever wordplay ("Blasphemy") and the slightly cheesy, supremely catchy MOR pop he made his name with ("You Know Me," "Won't Do That"). Only the garish '80s-style rocker "Do You Mind" fails. The end result may not be enough to convince America it's missing out, but expect this album to bring the already-converted back on-board in droves.—MS

JUSTIN BIEBER

Release Date: Nov. 17

Fifteen-year-old pop sensation Justin Bieber's first Billboard Hot 100 single, "One Time," was an insanely catchy ode to young love that immediately won over fans. And so were his second, third and fourth. It's no wonder, then that Bieber's debut album, "My World," sticks to the formula. His vocals are as boyish as they are disarmingly mature. LEONA LEWIS

Echo
Producers: various
J/Syco
Release Date: Nov. 17

"I breathe, I hear, but I don't believe it," U.K. pop artist Leona Lewis sings on "Alive," a standout track from her second album, "Echo." "My heart, it beats, but inside I'm freezing." Lewis' detractors will find it hard to separate those lyrics from the main criticism often lobbied against her: that she's technically gifted, but there's a soulful quality missing from her performance. While it's true that Lewis has never emoted on the level of her heroine, Whitney Houston (an awfully high bar to match), "Echo" still marks a vast improvement over her post-"X Factor" debut release in 2007. A range of writer/producers—including Ryan Tedder, Kevin Rudolf and Max Martin—help the singer reveal a more expressive side. The result is most apparent on Martin's upbeat electro-pop "Outta My Head," where she's finally allowed to let loose. As haunting as Lewis' ballads are, perhaps fewer of them would do her some good.—MH

PRETTY RICKY

Pretty Ricky
Producer: Diamond Blue Smith
Bluestar/Big Cat/Tommy Boy
Release Date: Nov. 17

The giant parental advisory/explicit lyrics sticker on the front of Pretty Ricky's new self-titled album leaves no doubt as to what the group is still up to on its latest musical outing. The former Atlantic quartet comes packing with a new member (Lingerie) as well as sexually charged songs whose titles don't leave much to the imagination ("Menage a Trois," "Doggystyle" and "Sticky"). Pretty Ricky goes hard right from the start with an intro that trumpets this telling piece of information: "My sex drive is times a million, trillion." Another song, the aptly titled "Black," intones that once you go black, you never go back." The foursome can be clever and fun, as demonstrated on "Mr. Goodbar" and mellow lead single "Tipsy (In Dis Club)"—about the tamest song on the set. The group gets off, however, on the mood-setting "Lapdance." Despite the title, it's a languid R&B groove that pleasingly complements the quartet's sweet, urgent harmonies. It also hints at something for the guys to keep in mind next time: Sometimes less is more.—GM

THE ROLLING STONES

Get Yer Ya-Ya's Out! (40th-Anniversary Deluxe Boxed Set) Producers: The Rolling Stones, Glyn Johns
Release Date: Nov. 3

For a band with such a storied history of great performances—and a large catalog of live recordings—there's little a fan can buy (legally, at least) that captures the Rolling Stones at the full height of their powers. "Get Yer Ya-Ya's Out!," which captures the band at New York's Madison Square Garden in 1969, has always been the best of the bunch. This smart four-disc package commemorates the concert's 40th anniversary with a pristine remastered version of the original recording, five previously unreleased songs from the same show and an entire disc devoted to the fiery opening acts, B.B. King and Ike & Tina Turner. But the real treat for Stones fans is the 29-minute DVD by director Albert Maysles, which features material left out of the documentary "Gimme Shelter." Here, Maysles manages to give the vast stage show at the Garden an intimate feel and reveal the band's immortality.—DJP

TRAVIS McCOY

One at a Time (2:55)
Producers: The Smeezingtons
Writers: various
Decaydance/Fueled by Ramen

Travis McCoy's gig as the ambassador to MTV's Staying Alive foundation recently gave the Gym Class Heroes frontman another reason to make music. On Dec. 1, McCoy and the nonprofit released "One at a Time," a charity single that coincides with World AIDS Day. The track was written after McCoy visited communities in South Africa, India and the Philippines that are fighting the global epidemic. Producers Philip Lawrence and Bruno Mars, better-known as the Smeezingtons, mix lingering acoustic guitar riffs with midtempo beats, over which McCoy sings, "We gotta speak soft and listen harder . . . so go on and spread the word, and not the virus." Though McCoy's signature tongue-in-cheek approach is absent, his lyrics should resonate and influence young listeners to get involved in a vital cause.—MM

FOUR TET

Love Cry (9:13)
Producer: Kieran Hebden
Writer: K. Hebden
Publisher: Chrysalis Music
Domino Recordings

Almost five years after his last full-length release, English avant-hip-hop trailblazer Kieran Hebden is set to return in 2010 with "There Is Love in You." Those looking for more of the caustic angularity on 2005's "Everything Ecstatic" will be shocked at the directness of Hebden's new single. A nine-minute trance-out, "Love Cry" harbors some of the artist's most accessible, danceable grooves to date. The song takes a cue from "Moth/Wolf Cub," his collaborative 12-inch with dubstep artist Burial from earlier this year. As its midtempo groove steadily heats up without boiling over, cooing female vocals repeat the song's title and house-style synths weave in and out of the periphery, with a hint of signature weirdness thrown in for the fanboys. "Love Cry" is thinking person's dance music at its finest.—RH

IYAZ

Producer: J.R. Rotem
Writers: various
Time Is Money/Beluga Heights/Reprise

With his charismatic vocals and Caribbean roots, Iyaz—the first artist signed to Sean Kingston's Time Is Money Entertainment—bears a close resemblance to his mentor. It's no surprise, then, that the newcomer's first single, "Replay," is an island-style ode to romance. "Shawty's like a melody in my head that I can't keep out, got me singin' like/Na-na-na-na everyday, it's like my iPod's stuck on replay," Iyaz croons on the catchy chorus. The artist's charm comes across through his youthful, exuberant voice, while producer J.R. Rotem supplies a breezy beat sprinkled with effervescent strings and synths. "Replay" sees Iyaz delivering on the reggae-pop formula that's already worked well for Kingston. Though he'll need to set himself apart on the next single, Iyaz is off to a promising start.—KP

RIHANNA FEATURING YOUNG JEEZY

Producers: Christopher "Tricky" Stewart, Terius "the-Dream" Nash
Writers: various
SRP/Def Jam/IDJMG

The notion of Rihanna as impervious—both emotionally and career-wise—is central to her new album "Rated R," and her second single, "Hard," puts forth that message loud and clear. "They can say whatever/I'ma do whatever/No pain is forever/Yup, you know this," the Barbadian singer boasts in a rap cadence over gurgling synths and antagonistic piano notes. "Tougher than a lion/Ain't no need in tryin'/I live where the sky ends." Rihanna effectively assumes the hip-hop posture and even recruits the ultimate street cred-booster in rapper Young Jeezy, who provides the thrust needed to send a song with a somewhat inert chorus home. Though "Hard" doesn't find Rihanna in her typical comfort zone, the atypical is precisely what she has aimed for with her new material—and it works.—MH

Writers: B. Paisley, A. Gorley, K. Lovelace
Publishers: various

Brad Paisley has a gift for wrapping astute observations on American life and culture in tasty musical packages. The country artist does it again with this engaging third single and title track from his chart-topping "American Saturday Night" album. The song's melody is absolutely infectious, and its chorus is an open invitation to sing along. But it's the well-crafted verses, which celebrate the American melting pot, that make it a hit. "It's like we're all livin' In a big ol' cup/Just fire up the blender, mix it all up," Paisley sings. The artist delivers a revved-up performance that teems with personality and panache. Paisley has already scored 15 No. 1 hits on Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart, and this upbeat single looks sure to reach the summit next.—DEP

A Thing Of Beauty

Disney Fosters Synergy With 'Princess' Soundtrack

With its hand-drawn animation and hip, New Orleans-set story, "The Princess and the Frog," currently in limited release in New York and Los Angeles, is a mix of the classic and cutting edge for Walt Disney Animation Studios.

The film's soundtrack, which includes original compositions by Randy Newman and a new single from Ne-Yo, reflects a similar combination of old and new aesthetics that Disney hopes will connect with a diverse audience.

Released Nov. 23 on Walt Disney Records, "The Princess and the Frog" soundtrack debuts at No. 14 this week on Billboard's Top Soundtracks chart. With 10 original songs and seven score pieces composed by Newman, the set touches upon the jazz, gospel and zydeco music that define the diversity of the film.

"With something like this, the album is so tied into the movie experience that the soundtrack is like owning a piece of the film," says Damon Whiteside, senior VP of marketing at Walt Disney Records. Whiteside believes the soundtrack's close relationship with the film makes the disc comparable to a Broadway soundtrack and will help drive album sales instead of single-song purchases. "This feels like a purchase where you want the entire musical experience, not just a sample," he says.

Walt Disney Records' marketing campaign for the soundtrack will coincide with Disney's promotion of the film, which will go to wide release Dec. 11. For example, when fans preorder tickets to the film from Fandango or MovieTickets.com, they will be given a code that can be used to download album track "Dig a Little Deeper" for free on iTunes. Advertisements for the soundtrack will also appear before screenings of the film.

"The key for us is to align with the movie marketing team, and then have a stand-alone campaign as well," Whiteside says. "There's such a broad audience interested in seeing this movie that we are trying to reach, from parents to kids and even young teens."

"Never Knew I Needed," Ne-Yo's contribution to the album, represents another opportunity for the soundtrack to expand its demographic appeal. The Grammy Award-winning artist signed on to the project because of Disney's pedigree and for the chance to be involved with the first Disney animated film with an African-American lead character.

"Disney's animated films have such a timeless elements to them. My whole MO is to make music that's going to outlive me, so this made perfect sense for me," he says.

A precious love song built around a twinkling piano riff and pulsating R&B beat, "Needed" mirrors the film's simple style and offbeat charm. "The movie is traditional Disney but with a little different feel to it, and I felt like [the song] needed to have a little of both worlds—sweet, but with some flavor to it," Ne-Yo says. "I think we hit the mark."

When the film goes to wide release, Walt Disney Records will increase its promotion of the album with retail circulars and radio/TV advertising. Although the movie is marketed as an innovative new fairy tale, the label also believes the film will make audiences recall the soundtracks to Disney's past animated hits like "Aladdin" and "The Little Mermaid."

"This film makes you remember that when music is so integrated into a movie, it can jump off the screen," Whiteside says. •••

All In The Family

The Band Perry Savors Sweet Sibling Success

The Band Perry, a family trio made up of Kimberly, Reid and Neil Perry, has grabbed the attention of country radio in a way usually reserved for more established acts. The group's first single, "Hip to My Heart," which the trio co-wrote with Brett Beavers, jumps 45-40 on Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart this week after only five weeks of airplay.

It's one of the most-played songs at KKBQ Houston, which spun the record 58 times during the week ending Nov. 29. "It's a fun, bright and uptempo song that's perfect for a younger-targeted country station like KKBQ," says PD Johnny Chiang, who first saw the group perform in a conference room in Nashville. "I was blown away by the band's talent and charisma. [They] have 'it,' whatever 'it' is."

Mike Moore, PD at KWJJ (the Wolf) Portland, Ore., says he's convinced the Band Perry "will be the biggest breakout act of 2010. They sound fantastic live, they have amazing songs, and they look good. They are the total package." Moore says the group's sound "is like nothing else on the radio."

The trio owes its unique sound to its parents. "Most dads would be rocking their kids to sleep singing 'Rock-a-bye Baby,' " Kimberly says. "Our dad was singing us Rolling Stones songs, and our mom loves country. They definitely cross-pollinated our musical palette."

She describes the group's sound as "modern throwback. We love tons of old country, from [Johnny] Cash to Loretta Lynn to Hank [Williams], but we also love modern music. And we live up in Appalachia, so there's a little bit of bluegrass thrown in now and then."

Kimberly, the oldest of the trio, fronted her first high school band at age 15, employing Reid, then 10, and Neil, only 8, as her roadies. Eventually the brothers formed their own band, which opened for Kimberly's. Four years ago the siblings banded together. "We always knew at some point it would be a family band," Kimberly says.

The trio toured, playing "a little bit of everything—festivals, churches and clubs," Kimberly says. "Anywhere there was a pair of ears that would sit and listen, our dad was really dogged about getting us the opportunities to play for them."

Raised near Mobile, Ala., the siblings moved to East Tennessee seven years ago to be closer to, but not live in, Nashville. "Our initial inspiration and songs came from outside Nashville, so to keep one foot in and one foot out was always really important to us," Kimberly says.

The trio teamed with Garth Brooks' manager, Bob Doyle, in 2008 and a year later it signed with Republic Nashville. The group's debut album, which is being produced by Paul Worley (Lady Antebellum) and Nathan Chapman (Taylor Swift), is due in 2010. ....

CASHING IN

esha Sebert, who's better-known as the pop nger/songwriter Ke$ha, has nothing to hide.

She has a dollar sign tattooed on her and, inked over the spot of skin where she cks salt before slamming tequila shots. he was once trapped in an elevator that ne says went haywire after she provoked "ghost." She rambles about the psychic owers of narwhales—"the unicorn of the ea"—and asks if it's OK to use the ladies oom during a phone interview.

"I think people can stand to take themelves just a little less seriously," she says. 'm fighting the war against pretension."

Ke$ha's spontaneity is part of her charm. ne artist's debut single, "TiK ToK," an electo-pop song inspired by a night of epic parring and featuring a Diddy cameo, is No. 3 its eighth week on the Billboard Hot 100. ne song already peaked at No. 2 on Hot igital Songs and has sold 875,000 downads in the United States, according to ielsen SoundScan.

Before her recent success, the 22-year-d Los Angeles native was subsisting on ee tacos and, at one point, living out of a old 1978 Trans Am. She scored a break arlier this year as a featured artist on Flo ida's No. 1 Hot 100 hit "Right Round," hich inspired that dollar sign tattoo.

"I got it because I was being ironic. I didn't make any money off the Flo Rida song. No one knew it was me," Ke$ha says nonchalantly. "I'm money—I don't need money."

Ke$ha signed a deal with RCA Records shortly after "Right Round" topped the Hot 100, and she's now prepping her debut album for an early 2010 release. Tentatively titled "Animal," the set features production from Dr. Luke as well as collaborations with Max Martin and Benny Blanco.

Ke$ha is currently touring, backed by a DJ, bassist and keytar player and armed with a cannon as a stage prop. Though she says she could "party in a cardboard box," the singer boasts that her live show is a "sensory assault" of sweat, beer and glitter.

If Ke$ha is serious about anything, it's self-motivation. Case in point: She once snuck into Prince's house to ask him to produce her album. "If you visualize what you want and you go for it and you work your ass off," she says, "you can realize your own realities." —Sandy Gordon

IN THE SPIRIT

Jazz saxophonist Kirk Whalum credits adversity for inspiring the genre-bridging, live-recorded project he started in 1998, "The Gospel According to Jazz."

"I had been on Columbia Records for 12 years when I was kicked to the curb like a lot of other artists," Whalum recalls. "The next day my wife said, 'What can we do today that we couldn't do yesterday?' And the first thing that came to mind was, 'Why don't we do the project [the label] promised they would support?' So we called up [pianist/producer] George Duke and got started."

Whalum and Duke's expressive distillation of music and message is once again movingly displayed on "The Gospel According to Jazz: Chapter III." The follow-up to prior installments in 1998 and 2002 is due Feb. 16 from Whalum's Top Drawer Records through distributor Mack Avenue Records.

Recorded live at Reid Temple in Glenn Dale, Md., the double-CD set also spotlights special guests Lalah Hathaway, guitarist Doc Powell, Bishop T.D. Jakes and several Whalum relatives: sons Kevin and Kyle, nephew Kenneth Whalum III and Whalum's sax-playing uncle, Hugh "Peanuts" Whalum.

In addition to original material like the rousing "Fit to Battle," the set includes inspirational covers of songs popularized by Luther Vandross ("Make Me a Believer"), Charlie Chaplin ("Smile") and Maze featuring Frankie Beverly ("Running Away"). Two singles are being worked: a revamped version of the Stylistics' 1971 R&B/pop hit "You Are Everything" and "He's Been Just That Good" featuring Hathaway. "We wanted this to be off the beaten path of what fans may expect, to stir things up," Whalum says.

An avid fan of social media, Whalum and Atlanta-based Fairwave Media will launch the "Music Is Love. Share12" campaign to help spread the word about "Gospel." Kicking off on the project's release date, the interactive campaign (facebook.com/kirkwhalum) will let fans send 12 people instant messages about the album. When those 12 confirm they've received the sender's message, the original sender can download up to nine "Gospel" tracks for free. Then the 12 others in the circle can share the message with 12 more and so on.

Also being released is a DVD of the "Gospel" live recording at Reid Temple. "We're just trying to connect all the dots on this spiritual journey," Whalum says. —Gail Mitchell

Billboard CHARTS

THE HOT BOX

A WEEKLY ROUNDUP OF NOTABLE CHART ACHIEVEMENTS

On DK Alert

Courtesy of last week's introduction of catalog titles to the mix of the Billboard 200, Pink Floyd's "Dark Side of the Moon" logs a record-tying 742nd week on the chart dated 2007 as it re-enters at No. 88—its first week on the chart since Oct. 8, 1988.

Hot Dawn

Roger Anahí of the retired Latin sextet RBD debuts at No. 4 on Top Latin Albums with "Me Delirio" (20,000 copies). Its first-week sales are greater than the 3,000 that launched the bow of RBD's final studio set, "Para Olvidarte de Mí," in April.

Mixed

Beyoncé debuts at No. 1 on Top Music Video Sales with "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce: Live in Europe," her second release on the chart (see page 34). "Live at Wembley" reigned for three weeks in 2004. She also spent two weeks at No. 1 in 2006 as part of "Destiny's Child: Live in Atlanta."

CHART BEAT

Adam Lambert may have defeated Kris Allen in "American Idol," but Adam Lambert beats the series' reigning champ on the Billboard 200. Lambert's major-label debut, "For Your Entertainment," bows at No. 3, topping the No. 11 start for Allen's self-titled introductory set last week. Last year, runner-up Kris Allen likewise arrived with a higher rank (No. 2) than victor Taylor Hicks (No. 3).

On the chart dated Nov. 67, the cast of Fox's "Glee" returns John Lennon's "Imagine" to the Billboard Hot 100 for a third consecutive year, following versions by Jack Johnson (No. 90, 2007) and Adam Archuleta (No. 36, 2008). Lea Michele Spencer's rendition first debuted back Lennon's 1971 No. 3-peaking classic to the chart, debuting No. 85 in 1998.

Boyle's 'Dream' Bow Yields Year's Best Sales Week

YouTube sensation and former "Britain's Got Talent" contestant Susan Boyle's debut album, "I Dreamed a Dream," opens at No. 1 on the Billboard 200 with a whopping 701,000 copies sold in its first week, according to Nielsen SoundScan. It's the best sales week for an album in the United States this year.

The year's previous high-water mark came when Eminem's "Relapse" sold 608,000 in its opening week. In fact, Boyle's sales frame is the best the chart has seen since AC/DC's "Black Ice" bowed with 784,000 upon its release in October 2008.

The arrival of "I Dreamed a Dream" also marks the best opening week for a debut album from a female artist since SoundScan began tracking sales in 1991. Boyle beats out Ashanti for the title, as her self-titled debut began with 503,000 in 2002.

In SoundScan's history, only one other debut album has seen a bigger opening week: Snoop Dogg's "Doggystyle" opened with 803,000 in its first week in 1993.

Boyle's fellow U.K. countrymen should be proud as well: "Dream" notches the best sales frame for an album by a solo U.K. performer in SoundScan history. In fact, only two U.K. acts—the Beatles and Coldplay—have earned bigger weeks.

Finally, "Dream" has the eighth-best sales week for an album by a solo female in SoundScan history.

As Billboard reported last issue, expectations were high for Boyle's first week, especially considering the reportedly large number of preorder sales the set had racked on QVC and Amazon. As it turns out, those reports were accurate, as the title's sales from nontraditional sellers tallied 256,000, or 37% of its debut week. That figure includes sales from QVC, traditional Internet retailers and digital download services.

On Top Internet Albums, "Dream" arrives at No. 1 with 132,000—the largest sales week for an album sold online. Previously, the best sales frame came from Dave Matthews' "Some Devil" when it hit No. 1 on the Oct. 11, 2003, chart with 87,000.

THANKS FOR GIVING: Susan Boyle wasn't the only artist to drop an album during the busy Thanksgiving shopping week, as the reality TV star led a packed release schedule.

Fellow reality TV wonder Adam Lambert, the 2009 "American Idol" runner-up, sees his debut, "For Your Entertainment," start at No. 3 on the Billboard 200 with 198,000 copies.

We're not sure if its sales were helped or hurt by his much-talked about American Music Awards performance the night before the album's release, but one thing's for certain: Everyone knew he had an album out.

LEADING LADY: Lady Gaga's new eight-song EP, "The Fame Monster," bows at No. 5 with 174,000, while her first album, "The Fame," is close behind at No. 6 (151,000, up 429%).

The latter album's total this week combines sales of her debut set as well as a two-disc deluxe "The Fame Monster" package that contains "The Fame" as well as the "Monster" disc.

There have been instances of this situation in the past, but none quite as high profile as Gaga's.

Exactly a year ago this week, Capitol reissued Coldplay's "Viva La Vida or Death and All His Friends" in a deluxe version with the tag line "Prospekt's March Edition." And, as a courtesy to consumers who had already bought "Viva" earlier in the year, the bonus content from the deluxe album was also offered in a stand-alone "Prospekt's March" EP.

Billboard and Nielsen SoundScan combined the sales of the original "Viva" album with the deluxe version of the release while also separately charting and tracking the "Prospekt's" EP.

That week, the combined sales of the two full-length albums pushed the "Viva" set 54-26 on the Billboard 200 with 43,000 (up 127%) while the "Prospekt's" EP debuted at No. 15 with 77,000.

Interscope got the stand-alone EP ball rolling earlier in 2008, with the expansion of Fergie's "The Dutchess" into "The Dutchess Deluxe."

The cuts added to her plussed-up album were also offered as a separate digital-only "The Dutchess Deluxe EP," which debuted on the Billboard 200 with 11,000. ....

The Wal-Mart-exclusive set vaults with 150,000 (up 385%) thanks in part to its $5 sale tag at the retailer last week.

Exactly four years after she last debuted on the chart, the singer returns, starting with 89,000. In 2005, her last release, "Oral Fixation Vol. 2," began at No. 5 with 128,000.

The album's lead single, "Down," spent two weeks atop the Billboard Hot 100 in October. Now, his full-length debut enters with 31,000 copies.

The four-disc CD boxed set carries an economical $24.98 list price (though the vinyl version goes for $149.98) and starts with 22,000. Internet sales made up 28% of the package's first week.

With a gain of 286%, the set returns to the chart thanks at least in part to the fact that Best Buy sale-priced it for $6.99 on the two days following Thanksgiving.

Oh, boys! The steadily selling cast recording—first released in 2005—hit 1 million in sales two weeks ago. Only a handful of cast albums have hit that mark in the Nielsen SoundScan era, including "Rent," "Phantom of the Opera" and "Mamma Mia!"

The trio's third covers set in a row (11,000) finds the act taking on such unlikely hits as Lonestar's "Amazed," Goo Goo Dolls' "Iris" and Cyndi Lauper's "Time After Time."

115
Jackson's classic Epic solo debut returns to the Billboard 200 for the first time since Oct. 6, 1984. At the same time, his 1991 set, "Dangerous," also stages a comeback at No. 147.

139
Two weeks ago, this 1993 release moved past the 5 million sales mark. It also stands as the 19th-best-selling greatest hits package of the Nielsen SoundScan era. The biggest? The Beatles' "1" (11.5 million).

200
With catalog Christmas albums swamping the chart, the overall No. 200-selling album this week shifts 7,000. Compare that with the No. 200 title on the Top Current Albums tally (viewable at billboard.biz/charts), which moves 4,000.

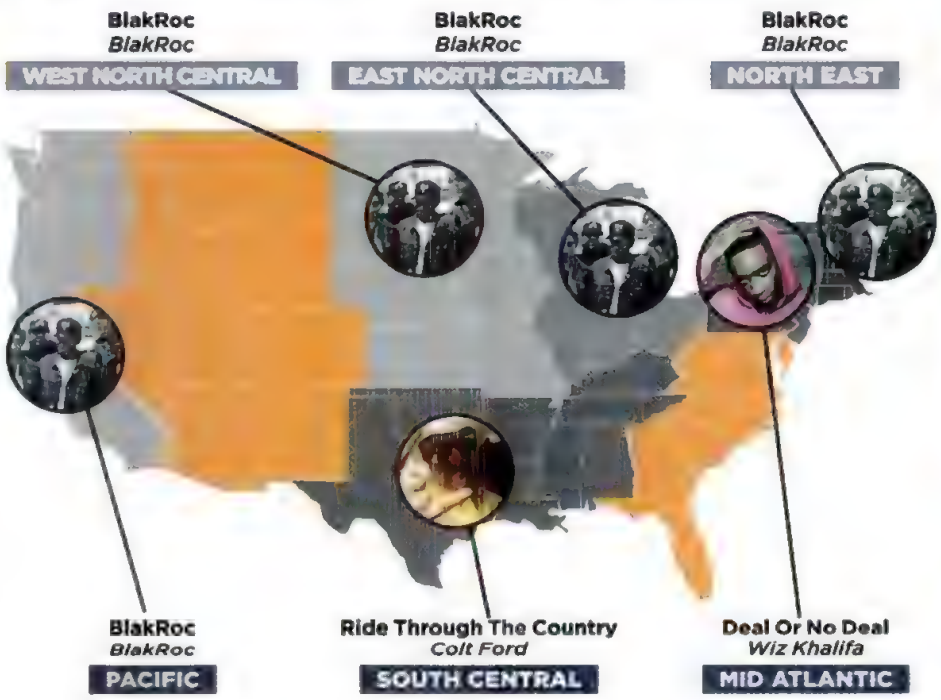
Also known as Robi Draco Rosa, the singer/songwriter returns with his fourth entry on this chart, while also bowing at No. 11 on Top Latin Albums.

A lengthy profile on the singer during NPR's Nov. 22 "Morning Edition" aids the set for a second week, as it gains 51% with nearly 2,000 sold.



The Christian singer's third Heatseekers-charting set is a Christmas affair and includes a duet with his daughter, Maddison.

Song, performed by the singer on ABC's "American Music Awards" (Nov. 22) and on "Good Morning America" two days later, makes a huge jump on this list while debuting at No. 12 on Hot Digital Songs (80,000 downloads).

29

Combination of her "American Music Awards" performance of this track and the release of star's "She Wolf" album (No. 15 on Billboard 200) prompts a 159% digital jump for the title (61,000).

62

Title track from record-breaking No. 1 album (see Over the Counter, page 33) is its top seller (39,000 downloads), but received only one play from the 1,259 stations on the chart's radio panel, from gospel outlet KOKA-AM Shreveport, La.

95

Song was featured on Nov. 23 series finale of TLC's "Jon & Kate Plus 8," pushing song downloads up 440%. Christian vocalist also posts the best album sales week of her career as "My Paper Heart" moves 13,000 (No. 97 on Billboard 200), more than double its best sum in May.

GAGA AND BEYONCÉ DIAL UP A HIT

Lady Gaga and Beyoncé team on the Billboard Hot 100's top debut as "Telephone," from Gaga's new "The Fame Monster" set, opens at No. 30. It is one of two debuts on the list for each; Lady Gaga's "Speechless" enters at No. 94; Beyoncé arrives at No. 65 with "Video Phone." The latter track unites the songstresses once more as a remix, featuring Gaga, that appears on the deluxe edition of Beyoncé's "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce," on iTunes a la carte or as a three-song digital single along with two other new tracks. Of the 28,000 downloads sold, 93% are of the new remix. —Silvio Pietroluongo

Susan Boyle not only makes a record-breaking entrance atop the Billboard 200 (see story, page 33), but she also bows on Adult Contemporary at No. 29 with "Silent Night," the closing track on her debut set, "I Dreamed a Dream." WDOK Cleveland leads all chart reporters with 18 detections for the song in the survey's tracking week.

Also debuting on the list (viewable in full at billboard.biz/charts) is seasonal fare from Trans-Siberian Orchestra ("Nutrocker," No. 23) and Straight No Chaser ("The Christmas Can-Can," No. 26).

On the Adult Top 40 chart, Train chugs to its seventh top 10, as "Hey, Soul Sister" rises 11-9. Among groups this decade, Train ties 3 Doors Down and Maroon 5 for fourth-most top 10s. Since 2000, Goo Goo Dolls lead all groups with 10 visits to the top tier, followed by Nickelback (nine) and Matchbox Twenty (eight).

THE LADY IS LARGE

Up 1.3 million impressions in its third week atop Hot Country Songs, Lady Antebellum's "Need You Now" collects 39.3 million impressions during the tracking week, the largest weekly sum since Carrie Underwood's "Jesus, Take the Wheel" stacked 39.8 million on the Feb. 4, 2006, chart. Meanwhile, Tim McGraw claims his 44th top 10 on Hot Country Songs, as "Southern Voice" improves 1.9 million impressions (11-10), ranking him second among artists with the most top 10s in the current decade. That list is led by Kenny Chesney's 28 top 10s, while Toby Keith ranks third with 25. —Wade Jessen

RIHANNA RULES WITH FIRST NO. 1

After a tumultuous year, Rihanna rises triumphantly to her first No. 1 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums as "Rated R" debuts with 180,000 units. The same total nets the singer her best sales week on the Billboard 200, debuting at No. 4. Her previous best sales frame on the big chart came when "Good Girl Gone Bad" entered with 162,000 at No. 2 in 2007, while on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, her "A Girl Like Me" posted her previous chart high with its No. 2 debut in 2006.

Leading up to the album's release, Rihanna performed at the American Music Awards (Nov. 22) and on "Good Morning America" (Nov. 24). Eyes were also tuned in to her "20/20" interview with Diane Sawyer to discuss the February assault by ex-boyfriend Chris Brown. —Raphael George Roc-a-Fella co-founder Damon Dash launches his new venture, BlakRoc, with an album of the same name. The title bows at No. 21 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums (7,000 copies) and features guest turns from Jim Jones (pictured), Q-Tip, Ludacris, RZA and Nas Def.

With holiday titles entering radio rotation in lieu of current fare, particularly at adult R&B, Fiona's audience increase of 2.8 million impressions is the smallest for a Greatest Gainer winner all year.

Stone's single re-enters the same week her album debuts at No. 11 on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums with 10,000.

Snoop has placed at least two debuts on the chart each year since 1996. In total he owns 52 appearances, the third-most by a rapper after Jay-Z (133) and Lil Wayne (64).

Keys goes solo on this version of the former No. 1 single. The track is exclusive to the special edition of "The Element of Freedom," due Dec. 15.

Foxx's foster little time-making his chart return. One month after his monster smash "Blame It" left the list, moving to recurrent status—he debuts with the leadoff single from his next album, due in first quarter 2010.

'PAPERS' GIVES USHER 10th NO. 1

Usher's first single from his upcoming album registers his 10th career No. 1 on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs and breaks a tie with R. Kelly for the most chart-toppers since the tally began using Nielsen SoundScan data in December 1992 as "Papers" lifts 2-1. His eighth No. 1 since 2000, the track also moves Usher past the chart's former leaders Jay-Z and Alicia Keys, each with seven, for the most chart-toppers in the same span. On Adult R&B, "Papers" (No. 7) is Usher's second career top 10 after his last visit to the region, "Here I Stand," spent seven weeks at No. 1.

The title track lead single from Casting Crowns' new album (No. 1 on Top Christian Albums) is the act's eighth trip to the Hot Christian AC Songs summit, placing it in a three-way tie with MercyMe and Third Day for the most chart-toppers since the tally launched in July 2003.

Vickie Winans scores her second top 10, and first in more than three years, as "How I Got Over" rises 11-8 on Hot Gospel Songs. She peaked at No. 2 in October 2006 with "It's Alright." Featured artist Tim Bowman Jr. also logged a solo top 10 with "My Praise" in April 2005.

Patrulla 81 scores its fourth No. 1 debut, and second this year, on Top Regional Mexican Albums as "Sin Ti No Vive" sells 4,000 copies. The act's "Quierome Mas" opened at the top in the March 7 issue. In between its latest pair of chart-toppers, the band also placed two hits sets within the top 20.

Latin pop superstar Chayanne achieves his 18th top five hit on Latin Pop Airplay as "Me Enamore de Ti" jumps 9-5 (6.2 million listener impressions, up 12%). He now ranks fourth among artists with the most top fives in the chart's 15-year history behind Enrique Iglesias (25), Cristian Castro (23) and Luis Miguel (21).

WISIN & YANDEL RETURN TO THE TOP

Due to the reissue of their chart-topping "La Revolucion: Evolution," featuring eight new songs and bonus DVD material, Wisin & Yandel's "La Revolucion" catapults 10-1 on Top Latin Albums (selling 10,000 copies, up 365%). This marks the album's first return to the summit since its No. 1 debut in the June 13 issue. "Gracias A Ti" also achieves new peaks on Latin Rhythm Airplay (2-1, up 9%), Latin Pop Airplay (7-3, up 22%), Hot Latin Songs (7-4, up 28%) and Tropical Airplay (20-5, up 95%). —Rauly Ramirez

GOOD WORKS

ED TACKLES MALARIA IN AFRICA

laria No More has one goal: to stop malaria deaths in Africa 2015.
RED Distribution and some of its artists are helping the orization reach that goal by donating the proceeds from the w digital-only benefit album "Indie Rocks!," which features exclusive tracks by Third Eye Blind, the Walkmen and Peter rn and John, among others. It was exclusively released Nov. on Amie Street and can be purchased on MalariaNoMore.org.
RED Distribution events coordinator/office manager Tamara rton, who spearheaded the project with the company's rissa Abrusia, says the album's $10 price tag goes a long y in helping defeat malaria. Each copy sold will buy a net ated with insecticide for an African home.
"The $10 includes [paying for a] person to physically go into homes of people in need and install the net and show them w to use it," Horton says, noting that RED's goal is to raise ough money for 10,000 nets. "They last up to five years."
Horton, a longtime soccer fan, discovered Malaria No More ough her favorite team FC Barcelona, which supports the ganization. Since then, instead of sending her family and ends holiday and birthday cards, she'll visit Malaria No re's Web site and donate a net in their name.
Third Eye Blind frontman Stephen Jenkins became particrly interested in "Indie Rocks!" and donated his time to ord a promotional video to raise awareness for malaria is- s in Africa. Additionally, a live performance video of the nd's song "Bonfire" will be used on the organization's Web to promote the project, according to Horton.
"RED has agreed to give 100% to this, so what we sell it nothing stays with us," she says, adding that Amie Street l the artists also donated their services. "It all goes back he charity."

INSIDE TRACK

READY, FREDDY?

New Zealand's Fat Freddy's Drop sure knows how to take its time. The seven-piece dub outfit has been together for nearly a decade, yet only recently released its second album of studio material and, up until last week, had played just one gig in North America.

FAT FREDDY'S DROP

"We are an indie group—we have to crack the whip on ourselves," the band's trumpeter and unofficial spokesman Toby Laing says with a laugh. "It would have been good to be quicker, but we have to be really happy with the production side of it as much as the music."

The band's first studio album, "Based on a True Story," was a phenomenon in its home country, riding its reputation as one of the best live outfits to become the first independently distributed album to debut at No. 1 on the New Zealand albums chart in May 2005. But constant touring throughout Europe and a rebuilding of the band's Wellington studio meant a four-year gap before its follow-up, "Dr. Boondigga and the Big BW," saw the light of day. That album was just released stateside and brought the band to the States for a sold-out, three-stop West Coast tour.

But Laing promises that Fat Freddy's Drop will return early next year and that the wait for the third album won't be nearly as long. "The success of the band has relied very much on fans discovering the music and communicating it to their friends, and that gave us a lot of support here already," Laing says. "We're entering a new creative phase and improvising like we used to. Now we're keen to visit new places."

Marvin Hamlisch (left) and Alan Bergman performed their new original song for the film "The Informant," titled "Trust Me," and their classic song "The Way We Were" at an ASCAP reception honoring Hamlisch and Marilyn and Alan Bergman Nov. 18 at Los Angeles Catalina Jazz Club. Hamlisch also received the Hollywood Reporter's Maestro Award.

A DECADE IN RELIEF

What The Oughts Wrought By Bill Werde

Somewhere between John Mayer doing his best Ron Popeil to sell Vevo to the gathered A-list industry crowd and Queen Rania of Jordan explaining how Vevo was going to change the plight of Africa's undereducated children, it was impossible not to reflect on the decade that's coming to a close.

Vevo, of course, is the new service that promises to aggregate all licensed music video content into one spot and then monetize the expected scale with ads. The Dec. 8 launch party in downtown Manhattan was extravagant to say the least, with executives flying in from all over the world and a who's who of artists ranging from Bono to Lady Gaga.

"This is how it used to be all the time!" exclaimed more than one partygoer, surveying the extensive, attentive waitstaff toting hors d'oeuvres and premixed drinks for a few hundred. It was as if Vevo wanted to remind the business of how fun it could be—or how fun it will be if Vevo succeeds in its mission.

But if the mood in the room was oh-so-cautiously optimistic—"Vevo is the chance for the music industry to stop playing defense," Vevo chief architect Doug Morris said—the subtext was not. The night's most articulate moment of clarity came from Mariah Carey, who took the stage and said, "We want to slowly but surely salvage something that used to be amazing."

Salvage.

And then we all went home, opened up a browser and couldn't get Vevo to work until well into the next day, and then only spottily.

"This is how it used to be." Were people referring to the outsized nature of the party? Or the notion that in 2009, as in 2000, the top executives in the business were looking at a wildly popular, online consumer behavior and destination—today, music video consumption and YouTube—and trying to figure out how to control it?

This decade—all that history will say it ended up meaning for the music business—actually started in June 1999. That, of course, is when the original Napster launched.

It's amazing how little changed in the dynamic between record labels and digital companies, and for so long, as the '00s unfolded. I recently reread the first article I wrote about the MP3, in January 1999. The RIAA was suing to prevent the release of one of the first consumer MP3 players. Indie labels were embracing digital distribution because they felt it would "even the playing field." And major-label executives, speaking on condition of anonymity, addressed the need for control. "If we have the right kind of technology and agreements, we can have a system where it's clear what is authorized, and can be played or recorded," one of them said.

Despite the stumbles out of the gate, I'm heartened by Vevo.

Let's be honest: Those beliefs really didn't start to change until two or three years ago, and only then after years of relentless, unmerciful drops in CD purchases, not to mention bottom lines.

In the last couple of years, the labels have finally become more flexible in licensing their music to services and letting go of copyright protection. It hasn't saved the business, at least not yet. But it's letting music companies focus their energy and resources on trying to create new, workable models.

The labels still have a long way to go. With the exception of iTunes, the services they've been willing to license have yet to show much profit, with many of the most current efforts (iLike, imeem, Lala) getting sold in a recent flurry at alleged fire sale prices. It's almost as if the music business gods wanted to book-end the decade and send a reminder: Sorry, guys, you're not quite there yet.

Was it a good decade? It was great for music, which is everywhere now. People take it with them on their phones and in their sneakers; they hear it during movies and TV shows and commercials; they make it for cheap and can distribute it to tens of millions for free. None of that existed on Dec. 31, 1999. Nor did the careers of such bold new talents as Beyoncé, Eminem, M.I.A., Alicia Keys, Justin Timberlake, the Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Kanye West, Lady Gaga, Taylor Swift, Coldplay, Susan Boyle . . . I could keep going.

But was it a good decade for the business? It was brutal, with creative companies and individuals lost to falling profits. But I think that the recorded-music sector has weathered the worst and is about to come out the other side.

Sometime in the next six to 12 months, the growth curve of digital music will finally, finally catch the descent of CD sales. At last there will be a new baseline for the size of the business, a new solid floor, albeit a much lower one to build upon. Which is why, despite Vevo stumbling out of the gate, I'm heartened by the attempt to build. Whether it's Vevo, or the labels investing in MySpace or Apple snapping up Lala—these are aggressive new strategies for monetizing content. They show big thinking and a partnership approach with technology companies. It gives me hope that maybe, just maybe, the labels and publishers really have learned from the last 10 years.

The business we're all left with is much smaller. But it's also populated with survivors. It's far more nimble, and hungry to experiment with new revenue streams.

So bring on Vevo and the next 10 Vevos. (Preferably most of the next 10 will actually work at launch.) I look at the front cover of this issue and the first thing I see is a giant arrow pointing up. How about you? ••••

ON THE COVER Call it a Rorschach of sorts. Do your eyes naturally jump to the more optimistic arrow (and view of the decade) in the center, or fixate on the two red ones heading south? Here's what's not up for interpretation: Starting in the bottom right is our No. 1 artist of the decade, Eminem. Head left to No. 9, Destiny's Child; hop back right to No. 10, Jay-Z; and keep on counting down until you get to No. 75, Staind, in the top left. Sorry about the bar code, Alicia!

CHRISTMAS VIGIL

Retailers Say Holiday Sales Are Holding Up Better Than Expected BY ED CHRISTMAN

USIC RETAILERS SAY THEY REMAIN good cheer about the year-end holiday sell- season.

While it's too early to tell whether music mer- andisers will have a merry Christmas, some that sales during the first two weeks of the liday selling season are beating expectations, ot last year's comparable-store sales.

While U.S. album sales are down 13.6% dur- the last two weeks from the corresponding riod a year earlier, according to Nielsen Sound- an, music retailers say they're cautiously up- at about business.

The holiday selling season is "pretty good, and think it will get better as it goes on," one re- l chain executive says. "The final weeks are king good. The Susan Boyle thing [her debut um, "I Dreamed a Dream"] is phenomenal. s, you have another breakout in Andrea Bo- li ["My Christmas"], whose sales are taking , and a decent amount of new releases. hereas last year you virtually had nothing— rything they promised never materialized."

The release schedule is not only strong, but s across a wide swath of consumers. Older ppers are snapping up Boyle and Bocelli, ng kids are going for Justin Bieber's "My rld" and the two "Glee: The Music" sound- ks, and a broad segment of consumers are wn to recent releases by stars like 50 Cent, rie Underwood and Taylor Swift, whose deluxe sion of "Fearless" is generating brisk sales.

"You have a lot of different kinds of music ap- ling to a lot of different people," the retail ex- tive says. "The only thing missing is a ng-selling hit rock record. But with all the er genres, we may not need one this year."

Newbury Comics CEO Mike Dreese says the iday season has been good for his chain so During Thanksgiving week and the first week December, Newbury's comparable-store sales e down 6% but profits were up 5% from the e period last year. When the company's Web sales are added, profits were up 10% from a r earlier, Dreese says.

Although Newbury's music sales were down from a year earlier, profits were up 25%, nks to sales of higher-margin used CDs. hat's not to like?" Dreese asks.

Super D co-owner Bruce Ogilvie says sales feel er this year than last. "We are up 45% this year from November through this week, but last November we took a lot of returns," he reports.

Sales are up for the company's direct-to-consumer operations, as well as for its indie store clients, which usually see an uptick in Christmas-related foot traffic later than chain stores.

"They must be feeling something because orders from them just went up," Ogilvie says of the indies.

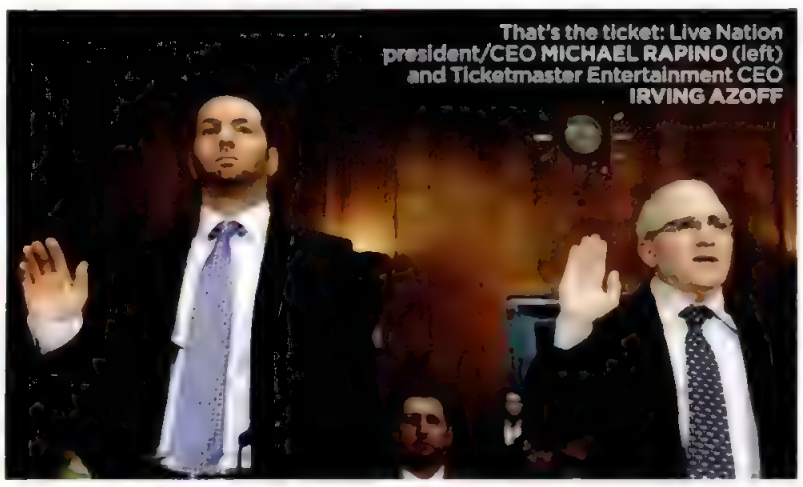
Another wholesaling executive says his firm is seeing strong catalog reorders for video and music, which is good news if it sells, and not so good if Christmas turns out like last year, when returns left merchants with coal in their stockings.

Meanwhile, digital track sales during the first two weeks of the holiday selling season totaled 38.5 million, down 0.7% from a year earlier, while digital album sales reached 3.3 million, up 2%, according to Nielsen SoundScan. During Thanksgiving week, album sales jumped 34% over the prior week, while digital track and digital album sales both inched up only 4% from the prior week. But the lackluster digital sales weren't a major concern because they don't usually kick in until after Christmas, when consumers who received iPods hit iTunes.

Merchants agree that the twin engines leading this year's holiday selling season could be Boyle's and Bocelli's breakout albums, which have already surpassed sales of 1 million units each in the United States, according to SoundScan.

"We were out of Boyle yesterday but got another 1,200 in today," Ogilvie says. "This may be a title that the indies scoffed at but are finding out they can't ignore it and they may need to stock it. They are ordering it but are saying, 'Keep it on the down-low.' Consumers are breaking down the door because they want the title."

Ogilvie says that with things starting well, it just might continue through the season. While online retailers capture a lot of business in the early part of the selling season, there is a big shift to brick-and-mortar stores beginning about a week before Christmas, he says.



"While the holiday selling season used to break open on about Dec. 12 or Dec. 13, now it doesn't break until Dec. 21," Ogilvie says. "That's when brick-and-mortar goes crazy." ••••

TOP 10 STORIES OF THE YEAR

Developments That Will Have A Profound Impact On What The Biz Looks Like In 2010 By Billboard Staff

1 TICKETMASTER-LIVE NATION MERGER PACT

Just as the nation's largest concert promoter and ticketing company had begun making competitive inroads onto each other's turf, Live Nation and Ticketmaster Entertainment signed a merger agreement in February that sent a shudder through the live entertainment business.

In addition to dominating their respective core markets, both companies boast a formidable stable of acts. Live Nation has long-term multirights deals with Madonna, U2, Jay-Z, Shakira and other superstars. The Front Line division of Ticketmaster Entertainment has ties with some 200 clients, including such heavyweights as the Eagles, Aerosmith, Jimmy Buffett, Kid Rock and John Mayer. The combined entity would also control a huge customer database. The marketing efficiencies would be enormous, as would the value to sponsors.

The U.S. Department of Justice is expected to conclude an antitrust probe of the proposed merger in early 2010. The union of Live Nation and Ticketmaster is about content, live and otherwise, and the ability to market and sell it, before, during and after a concert. The combined entity would be able to tap into—or control—revenue from ticketing, merchandising, sponsorships, e-commerce and recorded music. Pass or fail, this deal heralds the future of music.

2 TERRA FIRMA FAILS TO RESTRUCTURE EMI DEBT

Terra Firma was on a tightrope all year as it grappled with the £2.7 billion ($4.5 billion) in debt it took on to acquire EMI Group. Terra Firma's lender Citigroup reportedly rejected the private-equity firm's offer to inject £1 billion ($1.7 billion) into EMI in an apparent bid to get the bank to forgive the same amount of debt. Now the two sides' talks will likely center on a debt-for-equity swap by Citigroup. The outcome of this latest maneuver could be that Terra Firma will have to share ownership of EMI with the bank—or perhaps be forced out altogether.

3 RECORDED-MUSIC SALES PLUNGE AGAIN

The plunge in recorded-music sales that began in 2001 showed no sign of abating in 2009. Through the week ending Nov. 29, U.S. sales of albums and track-equivalent sets (where 10 digital tracks equal an album) were down 8.7%, accelerating from a decline of 7.3% during the same period in 2008. CD sales plummeted 19.5%, worsening from a drop of 19% a year earlier. Meanwhile, growth in digital track sales slowed sharply to 9.7% through Nov. 29, down from 28.3% a year earlier. Lower growth rates are inevitable as the digital market expands, but the depth of the slowdown adds to the industry's already deepening worries over falling sales.

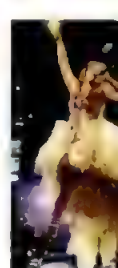
4 APPLE BUYS LALA

Any music-related acquisition by Apple and its iTunes store would be big news. But the company's December acquisition of Lala was particularly intriguing. What does the largest U.S. music retailer, which dominates the market for purchased song downloads, want with a company mostly known for streaming music? The deal may point to Apple's interest in "cloud"-based applications that enable users to access music and other entertainment content from any device. And that, in turn, provides yet more evidence that the future of Apple's lucrative iPod product line will be firmly rooted in Web-connected devices like the iPhone and the iPod Touch—and that the days of download-based players like the iPod Nano are numbered.

5 TAYLOR SWIFT, MEDIA JUGGERNAUT

Fueled by runaway sales of her album "Fearless," Taylor Swift's star exploded into a supernova, lending a much-needed commercial boost to country music. She was everywhere, performing on "Saturday Night Live" in January, hosting "SNL" in November, portraying a murdered teen on CBS' "CSI," appearing on "The Oprah Winfrey Show" twice, shooting a tongue-in-cheek rap video with T-Pain and cleaning up at the Country Music Assn. Awards. Perhaps the most remarkable aspect of Swift's ubiquity: She never lost her head in the glare of the media spotlight, even after Kanye West disrupted her acceptance speech for best female video at the MTV Video Music Awards.

6 LATE FEES STRENGTHEN PUBLISHERS' HAND



After the U.S. Copyright Royalty Board issued its final ruling in January on new mechanical royalty rates, the National Music Publishers' Assn. capitalized on the leverage it gained from the inclusion of a 1.5% late fee on tardy royalty payments. Under a settlement with the RIAA, which had appealed the fee, the major labels agreed to deliver publishers a windfall of more than $264 million in mechanical royalty payments comprising pending and unmatched royalty money. They also agreed to stop withholding song royalties on an album when the royalty split for a single song is the subject of a dispute among songwriters or when there's a dispute involving CD mechanicals for that album.

7 MICHAEL JACKSON SALES FRENZY

Michael Jackson's June 25 death set off one of the biggest sales explosions ever seen for an artist's catalog. As Sony scrambled to meet demand for product, U.S. sales of the late artist's solo albums totaled 422,000 units in the week of his death, surging from 10,000 units in the prior week, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In the following week, sales of his solo titles hit 794,000 units, benefiting from a full seven days of sales and replenished supplies. From his death through the week ending Nov. 29, Jackson's U.S. sales totaled 7 million albums, 10.2 million track downloads and 1.3 million DVDs, skyrocketing from year-to-date sales before his death of 300,000 albums, 1.2 million track downloads and 70,000 DVDs.

SWIMMING UPSTREAM

Free Streaming Gained Users, But Revenue Remains Elusive By Antony Bruno

IN 2009, MUSIC FANS FINALLY began to accept the concept of accessing music as a service over buying it as a product.

While subscription-based services like Rhapsody and Napster continued their struggle to acquire and retain customers, ad-supported rivals like European sensation Spotify, MySpace Music and even imeem saw impressive gains in usage and traffic. Spotify racked up 6 million users across Europe since its October 2008 launch, while imeem claimed 20 million visitors per month.

But with this surge in activity comes an inevitable reckoning over the underlying business model that will radically alter the direction of these services in the year ahead. Because while much of this rising interest in streaming vs. owning music is due to increased broadband Internet penetration and the availability of portable devices like the iPhone that can stream music rather than store it, the real driver is the price—free.

And therein lies the problem. Ad-supported services can't earn enough from advertising to cover their licensing fees. Just ask imeem, which ended the year being acquired by MySpace for a song, despite decent user numbers and moderately successful ad sales.

Meanwhile, record labels are unwilling to lower their rates to accommodate ad-supported services. It's not just because they fear free music will mean fewer sales, but also because the revenue per user gained from ad-supported services is less than the revenue per user gained from subscription services or direct sales.

"I don't think there's enough value in that business for anybody," says David Ring, executive VP of business development and business affairs for Universal Music Group's (UMG) eLabs division, about the ad-supported model on its own. Instead, he says labels are more interested in converting free users into paid users, either by up-selling them to a monthly subscription or getting them to buy additional products and services, using the free stream as a customer acquisition tool.

"We're always trying to drive upsell to transactions, upsell to bundles and purchase," he says. "But we definitely are not looking at the hope and the prayer that giving away free streaming will somehow magically convert people into buyers. We have to strike the right balance between giving the right service to a customer, earning the right compensation to us and our artists, and then upsell customers on other products."

Easier said than done. Offering free music certainly has the potential to inspire sales, but labels want it offered in a way that doesn't substitute other sales in the process. Suppose an ad-supported service converts 20% of its user base to a $10 monthly subscription. It would take 1 million free users to acquire 200,000 subscribers, who would then bring in an annual value of $24 million.

But according to one label executive who asked to remain anonymous, those same 200,000 users today would represent a ballpark retail value of $50 million per year, based on the assumption that they represent the more active music consumer.

"The free proposition can't be so compelling that people stop paying for music," the label executive says. "Even with the best-case scenario, the 'freemium' business model does not work."

So, expect to see the music industry increase its efforts to make paid services more compelling than free ones. The high rates charged today for ad-supported music are designed to make it less compelling for the service provider. Labels also are now releasing less of their catalog to predominantly ad-supported services and are experimenting with "window" strategies where the ad-supported sites get new releases later than the paid sites.

"If you want to give away something for free, you're massively restricted with the kind of content you have access to," says David Hyman, CEO of MOG, which scrapped plans for an ad-supported streaming service in favor of one carrying a $5 monthly fee. "Some of the labels won't do ad-supported music anymore at all. You're going to start seeing that coming into play when some of the existing services are going up for renewals on their contracts."

Islands in the stream: MySpace Music (top) and Rhapsody

Critics say these measures will only drive fans lured to ad-supported services from peer-to-peer sites back to their pirate habits. Rob Wells, senior VP of digital at Universal Music Group International, estimates that as many as 60% of Spotify users are former P2P users—in Sweden, it's closer to 80%—suggesting Spotify replaces P2P as the music discovery tool of choice.

But if P2P users indeed buy more music than the average music consumer—a theory that remains a point of heated debate—that only further illustrates the danger of substituting sales with free streaming.

Others counter that the $50 million in annual retail revenue cited as the current customer value bar is destined to fall as CD sales continue their slide, and that labels should proactively lower their expectations as a result to fall in line with what ad-supported services can earn from today's advertising rates. If the free, ad-supported streaming model existed in a vacuum, they'd have a point.

However, labels are at the same time eyeing a future where service providers (such as for the Internet and mobile phones) will add the cost of a monthly or yearly subscription fee into that of their services and devices. Lowering their rates to aid free ad-supported services that bring in far less revenue would hurt those chances.

"I want to make sure I don't screw up my future opportunity around interesting new models because I put free in competition with those new models," the anonymous label exec says.

It's the difference between collecting a small amount of money from a small group of music fans that previously spent a lot of money on music versus collecting a small amount of money from a large group of people that previously spent on average very little money on music.

"Let's say there are 70 million broadband homes in the U.S.," UMG's Ring explains. "If every single one is paying for a music service irrespective of how much they're using it, you can imagine the average revenue per those households for every month doesn't need to be as high as if you only had 500,000 of the biggest music users in the country signed up to a different service."

And since neither ad-supported nor subscription-based services generate any meaningful revenue for labels today, the industry is content to risk losing a few underperforming partners in hopes of gaining more lucrative ones in the future.

It's for this reason that Spotify has not yet launched in the United States, and why when it does it will look much different from the service made popular overseas. It's why MySpace Music president Courtney Holt says he's considering selling digital downloads directly rather than relying on affiliate deals with iTunes and Amazon and why he'll add ticketing and merch sales programs next year to further help monetize the service (not to mention the rumors that MySpace may introduce a subscription tier as well.)

"We're evaluating different businesses," Holt says. "We were never building a business that was 100% dependent on advertising. We're looking at diversified revenue streams with ad-supported streaming at its core."

Just as subscription services like Rhapsody and Napster gave away two-week free trials to potential customers, consider 2009 the year the music industry gave ad-supported music services a trial period of their own. Next year, that trial ends. How digital music fans react will be a story worth following. ••••

INSATIABLE APP-ETITE

Artists Reap Big Revenue From More Engaging App Experience By Antony Bruno

TWO YEARS SINCE "Buy U a Drank (Shawty Snappin')" was the top-selling mastertone of 2007, R&B artist/producer T-Pain is rocking the mobile world again, this time with the iPhone app "I Am T-Pain."

The app lets users record karaoke versions of his songs or sing over any other song stored in their iPhone, using Auto-Tune software. As of the weekend after Thanksgiving, the $3 app sold more than 600,000 copies since its Sept. 1 debut, making it the top-ranking paid music app in Apple's App Store and the 12th-highest-grossing among all apps. According to Jeff Smith, CEO of iPhone developer Smule (which made the app), the average user has launched it 17 times since purchase and spends 90 minutes using it; in total, users have created more than 10.4 million recordings.

And most exciting to the music industry, users bought more than 200,000 karaoke versions of the 10 T-Pain songs made available for 99 cents, sold from within the app itself.

The success of I "Am T-Pain" illustrates the potential for iPhone apps to become a revenue-generating platform in their own right and not just the promotional gimmick labels have positioned them to date. In the past year, dozens of artists flooded the App Store with free apps primarily consisting of nothing more than a few photos, the odd video, a listing of tour dates, Twitter and news updates and perhaps a song snippet or two.

In June, Apple introduced a software update that for the first time allowed developers to sell content from directly within their apps. Previously, developers had to either give away upgrades or ask users to buy and download a new version of their program. While the new capability opened the door to using apps to sell music, there's a hitch.

Apple won't let artists sell music through their apps; they have to link to iTunes. But if the music somehow becomes a function of the app itself and only usable from within the app, those rules no longer apply. For instance, iPhone users who own T-Pain's "Buy U a Drank" must pay another 99 cents to download the karaoke version of the song for the game.

"We've opened up a new category of music sales," Smule's Smith says. "It's self-contained. You have to buy this music in the context of the application. It's walled off and protected. Now, we're not cannibalizing sales, but [creating] a source of new revenue growth."

T-Pain is not alone. Lady Gaga's "iOKi" karaoke app costs $3 to download and offers extra tracks for 99 cents each. Tapulous, developer of the popular "Tap Tap Revenge 3," sells track packs from popular artists from within the app. According to Tapulous head of business development Tim O'Brien, more than 750,000 tracks have been bought since the game was released Sept. 25.

According to Jive VP of mobile marketing, sales and business development Sean Rosenberg, these new capabilities expand the iPhone platform from a disposable product built around recycled functionality and content into a service model. The label is planning to launch several artist-branded versions of the "Open Mic" karaoke game—developed in conjunction with developer Rain—as well as artist-branded versions of "Tap Tap Revenge" competitor "TapStar" fro EpicTilt in the coming months.

What's more, it's cheaper. Whi hiring a developer to create an arti branded app can run anywhere fro $20,000 to $100,000, developers li Tapulous and Smule operate excl sively on a revenue-sharing mod Money doesn't change hands upfro They simply split the revenue gain from the sale of the game and the sa of any in-game content, after App takes its 30% cut of both.

"You guys can go out and spe $50,000 to build an app and hope th it gets into the top 100, or you cou come to me and spend those dolla across my platform and I will guara tee you 10-20 million eyeballs O'Brien says. "Many artist apps do make it into the top 100. I've not leased a game yet that hasn't."

But it won't be as simple as just fering fans token content. To drive app sales, labels and artists will have develop innovative products that let t fan be part of the process in some w

"The key to moving content insi the application is allowing users to p sonalize that content in creative wa and share it," Smith says. "The da of purely passive entertainment numbered. It's no longer about b ing the CD and stuffing it in your c It's about getting closer to the art and understanding their personal and embracing their music."

That may be difficult for a mu industry still focused on control artists concerned about the integ of their creative vision. But if they to participate in the $2.4 billion-p year app economy, as estimated mobile advertising firm AdM rather than just giving away w amounts to digital schwag, it's a c cession they'll have to make.

AT YOUR SERVICE

Five Innovative, Music-Focused iPhone App Developers

SMULE
Founded by two professional musicians (one getting his PhD in music at Stanford and another a member of the Stanford music faculty), Smule specializes in apps that let users create music. Since the company was founded in June 2008, it has created only seven apps, three of which were No. 1 sellers, including "I Am T-Pain."

What Smule lacks in volume it makes up for in creativity. The company aims to make each artist app a unique creation, which can take up to five months to develop. It insists on retaining creative control and works exclusively on a revenue-share basis.

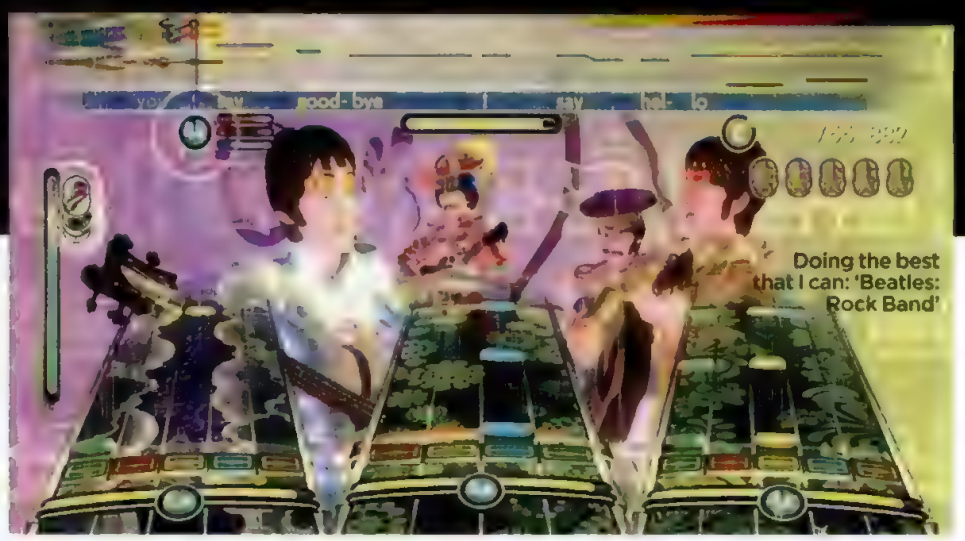
TAPULOUS
Tapulous created the "Guitar Hero" of iPhone apps, "Tap Tap Revenge." The music rhythm game is the most popular music game in the iPhone App Store and is now in its third iteration, "Tap Tap Revenge 3." The newest version allows users to buy and download new tracks for the game a la "Rock Band."

The company also makes artist-branded versions of the games and has done so for the likes of Nine Inch Nails, Weezer, Dave Matthews Band, Coldplay, Lady Gaga and Metallica. Tapulous claims various versions of the game reside on more than 18 million devices and plans to expand beyond the iPhone to Android and BlackBerry devices in the year ahead.

EPICTILT
The mobile offshoot of casual game developer Jirbo, EpicTilt has fast become a go-to developer for labels and artists looking for a fast iPhone app. The company creates customized versions of existing games for artists, resulting in such titles as "Be Like Lady Gaga," Soulja Boy Tell'em's "Kiss Me Through the Phone" and Asher Roth's "Do Something Crazy."

In July, it launched "TapStar," a competitor to "Tap Tap Revenge 3" that features downloadable content from Sony Music Entertainment, and is planning artist-branded versions as well.

MODERATI
One of the original ringtone aggregators, Moderati changed tack hard with the decline in ringtones and upsurge in iPhone apps. In July, it introduced "Rompir," a music remix app designed for artists who want to resell it as a branded application. Soulja Boy Tell'em jumped on board first, letting fans manipulate three of his songs by playing with eight sounds and adding up to seven extra samples to the mix. In November, 50 Cent unveiled his own "Rompir" app, and other artists are expected to follow.



MELODEO
Originally formed to power the back-end platform for mobile music stores, Melodeo now uses its streaming music technology to power several innovative iPhone apps. Such acts as Usher and the Presidents of the United States of America tapped the company to create apps that randomly stream songs from their catalog as a sort of personalized radio application.

Other apps include "Name That Guitar Riff" and "Kids Song Kwiz Game," which is sort of a "Name That Tune" for children's music. —A

Despite Buzzy Titles, Music Gaming Sales Plummet By Antony Bruno

Doing the best that I can: 'Beatles: Rock Band'

WHAT A DIFFERENCE A YEAR MAKES. The music-game category raked in $1.4 billion in revenue last year, according to Wedbush Morgan Securities analyst Michael Pachter, driven largely by sales of "Rock Band 2" and "Guitar Hero World Tour." By the time 2009 comes to a close, Pachter expects the category to make half that—$700 million—despite such high-profile releases this fall as "The Beatles: Rock Band," "Guitar Hero 5," "DJ Hero" and "Band Hero," not to mention "Guitar Hero: Van Halen," which is due Dec. 22.

According to data from NPD Group, sales of these games haven't met expectations. The Beatles game, while selling a respectable 800,000 units of its various versions so far, missed the million analysts expected in just the first month after its Sept. 9 debut. "Guitar Hero 5" sold 500,000 units in its first month, compared with the 1.4 million "Guitar Hero III" moved two years ago in its first month.

And "DJ Hero," the game that was meant to expand the category into the hip-hop genre, moved 123,000 units in the first few days after late-October on-sale, and analysts at Cowen & Co. slashed their sales forecast for the game from 1.6 million this year to 600,000.

So what happened to this once-promising category, which so many in the music industry looked to for much-needed revenue? According to Pachter, the answer is: Too many games with too much music in too short a time.

"[Game] publishers have probably done themselves a disservice by giving us way too much value for our money with each of these games," he says. "You just get way too much content. The installed base has a lot of music and they don't really need a lot more. It's sort of like buying more books when you have a stack of books left to read. You just don't."

Pachter points to the disappointing sales of "The Beatles: Rock Band" as proof of this theory.

"There isn't a game that we would expect to have more widespread appeal than that," he says. "And yet with the installed base of music game owners at around 20 million, it boggles the mind that only 800,000 bought 'Beatles: Rock Band.' "

But this doesn't mean the music-game category is a quickly fading fad with no future. No one expected the same level of record-breaking sales achieved last year, and Pachter expects the category will level off at about $500 million-$600 million per year, which he calls a "nice, healthy" genre on par with the "Call of Duty" action-game franchise. That doesn't take into account the revenue earned from in-game music sales, which "Rock Band" and "Guitar Hero" have yet to report.

To re-create the blockbuster sales of last year, the category needs a new innovation. One idea: Dahni Harrison—the son of the Beatles' George Harrison who worked closely on the development of "Beatles: Rock Band"—told the Chicago Tribune he is working with Harmonix to create a version of "Rock Band" with new controllers that could actually help teach gamers to play guitar rather than just simulating the experience. Such new motion-capture devices as Microsoft's Project Natal may also play a role in evolving the gameplay.

Until these innovations come to fruition, though, the music and videogame industries will have to live with a music-game market that has fallen back to earth. ••••

BYTE BY BYTE

Hand in hand with the decline of music-based game sales is a softening of the impact those games have on digital downloads.

A sampling of the songs included on soundtracks to "Guitar Hero 5," "Band Hero" and "DJ Hero" shows no significant increases in track sales as a result of their inclusion in each respective game, according to Nielsen SoundScan data.

The game with the most impact on sales was "Brutal Legend"—which isn't a music simulation game but an action/adventure title with a strong heavy metal theme and soundtrack. But while songs from acts like Motörhead and Judas Priest saw sales spikes as high as 700%, the volumes were too low to make much of a real impact—in many cases from single-digit or double-digit weekly sales to low triple-digit sales. —AB

TAYLOR SWIFT

The Country Superstar Talks About Writing Her Name In The Record Books, Life On The Road—And Gives A Sneak Peek At Her Next Album By Bill Werde

TO SAY TAYLOR SWIFT had a remarkable year would be a comic understatement. She sold more albums than any artist not named Michael Jackson. Her first headlining tour, Fearless 2009, sold out every show within minutes. She became the youngest woman to win the Country Music Assn.'s entertainer of the year award, and she set seemingly every chart record that exists. (For more on that, see page 48.) But most important, she proved herself a graceful, timeless celebrity, handling hosting duties on "Saturday Night Live" and a rampaging Kanye West at the MTV Video Music Awards with equal aplomb. We caught up with her on the phone from London to discuss her exhilarating last 12 months.

Have you spent much time reflecting on your growth in the past year?
I do a lot of reflecting. I'll be driving down the streets I used to drive down in Nashville and my song will come on the radio or I'll pass my high school and something will remind me of how my life was before all of these crazy dreams started coming true. We wished for this, my parents and I, every single day without actually believing it would come true.

You've set a ton of records this year and won a slew of awards. I'd like to run down a couple. You became the youngest person to win the entertainer of the year award at the Country Music Assn. Awards.
I'd have to say that was the most mind-blowing experience, hearing my name called and winning that award. That is an award I had placed in an unattainable spot in my head. To be the youngest to win it makes me love country music even more for being so open-minded.

And you spent more weeks on the Billboard 200 than any other artist this decade.
It's really hard for me to wrap my mind around that one. In a business where longevity is what you aim for and hope for and strive for, having my album on the charts that long just absolutely floors me. That is such a long time. That's another one of those times where I've gotten a phone call and I really had to ask the person several times if they were serious and if they had really checked the math.

You were the 12th person in 35 years of "Saturday Night Live" to host and perform, and the first female country star in 20 years to do so, the last being Dolly Parton.
Hosting "Saturday Night Live" was the best week of my life. I started as a theater kid, so "SNL" has been up on a pedestal for me and I've always wondered what it would be like to actually experience it. You don't even notice you're so busy that you have to eat while walking to your next meeting. I was at 30 Rock at 7 a.m. until 1 or 2 at night a lot of times. I didn't want to leave.

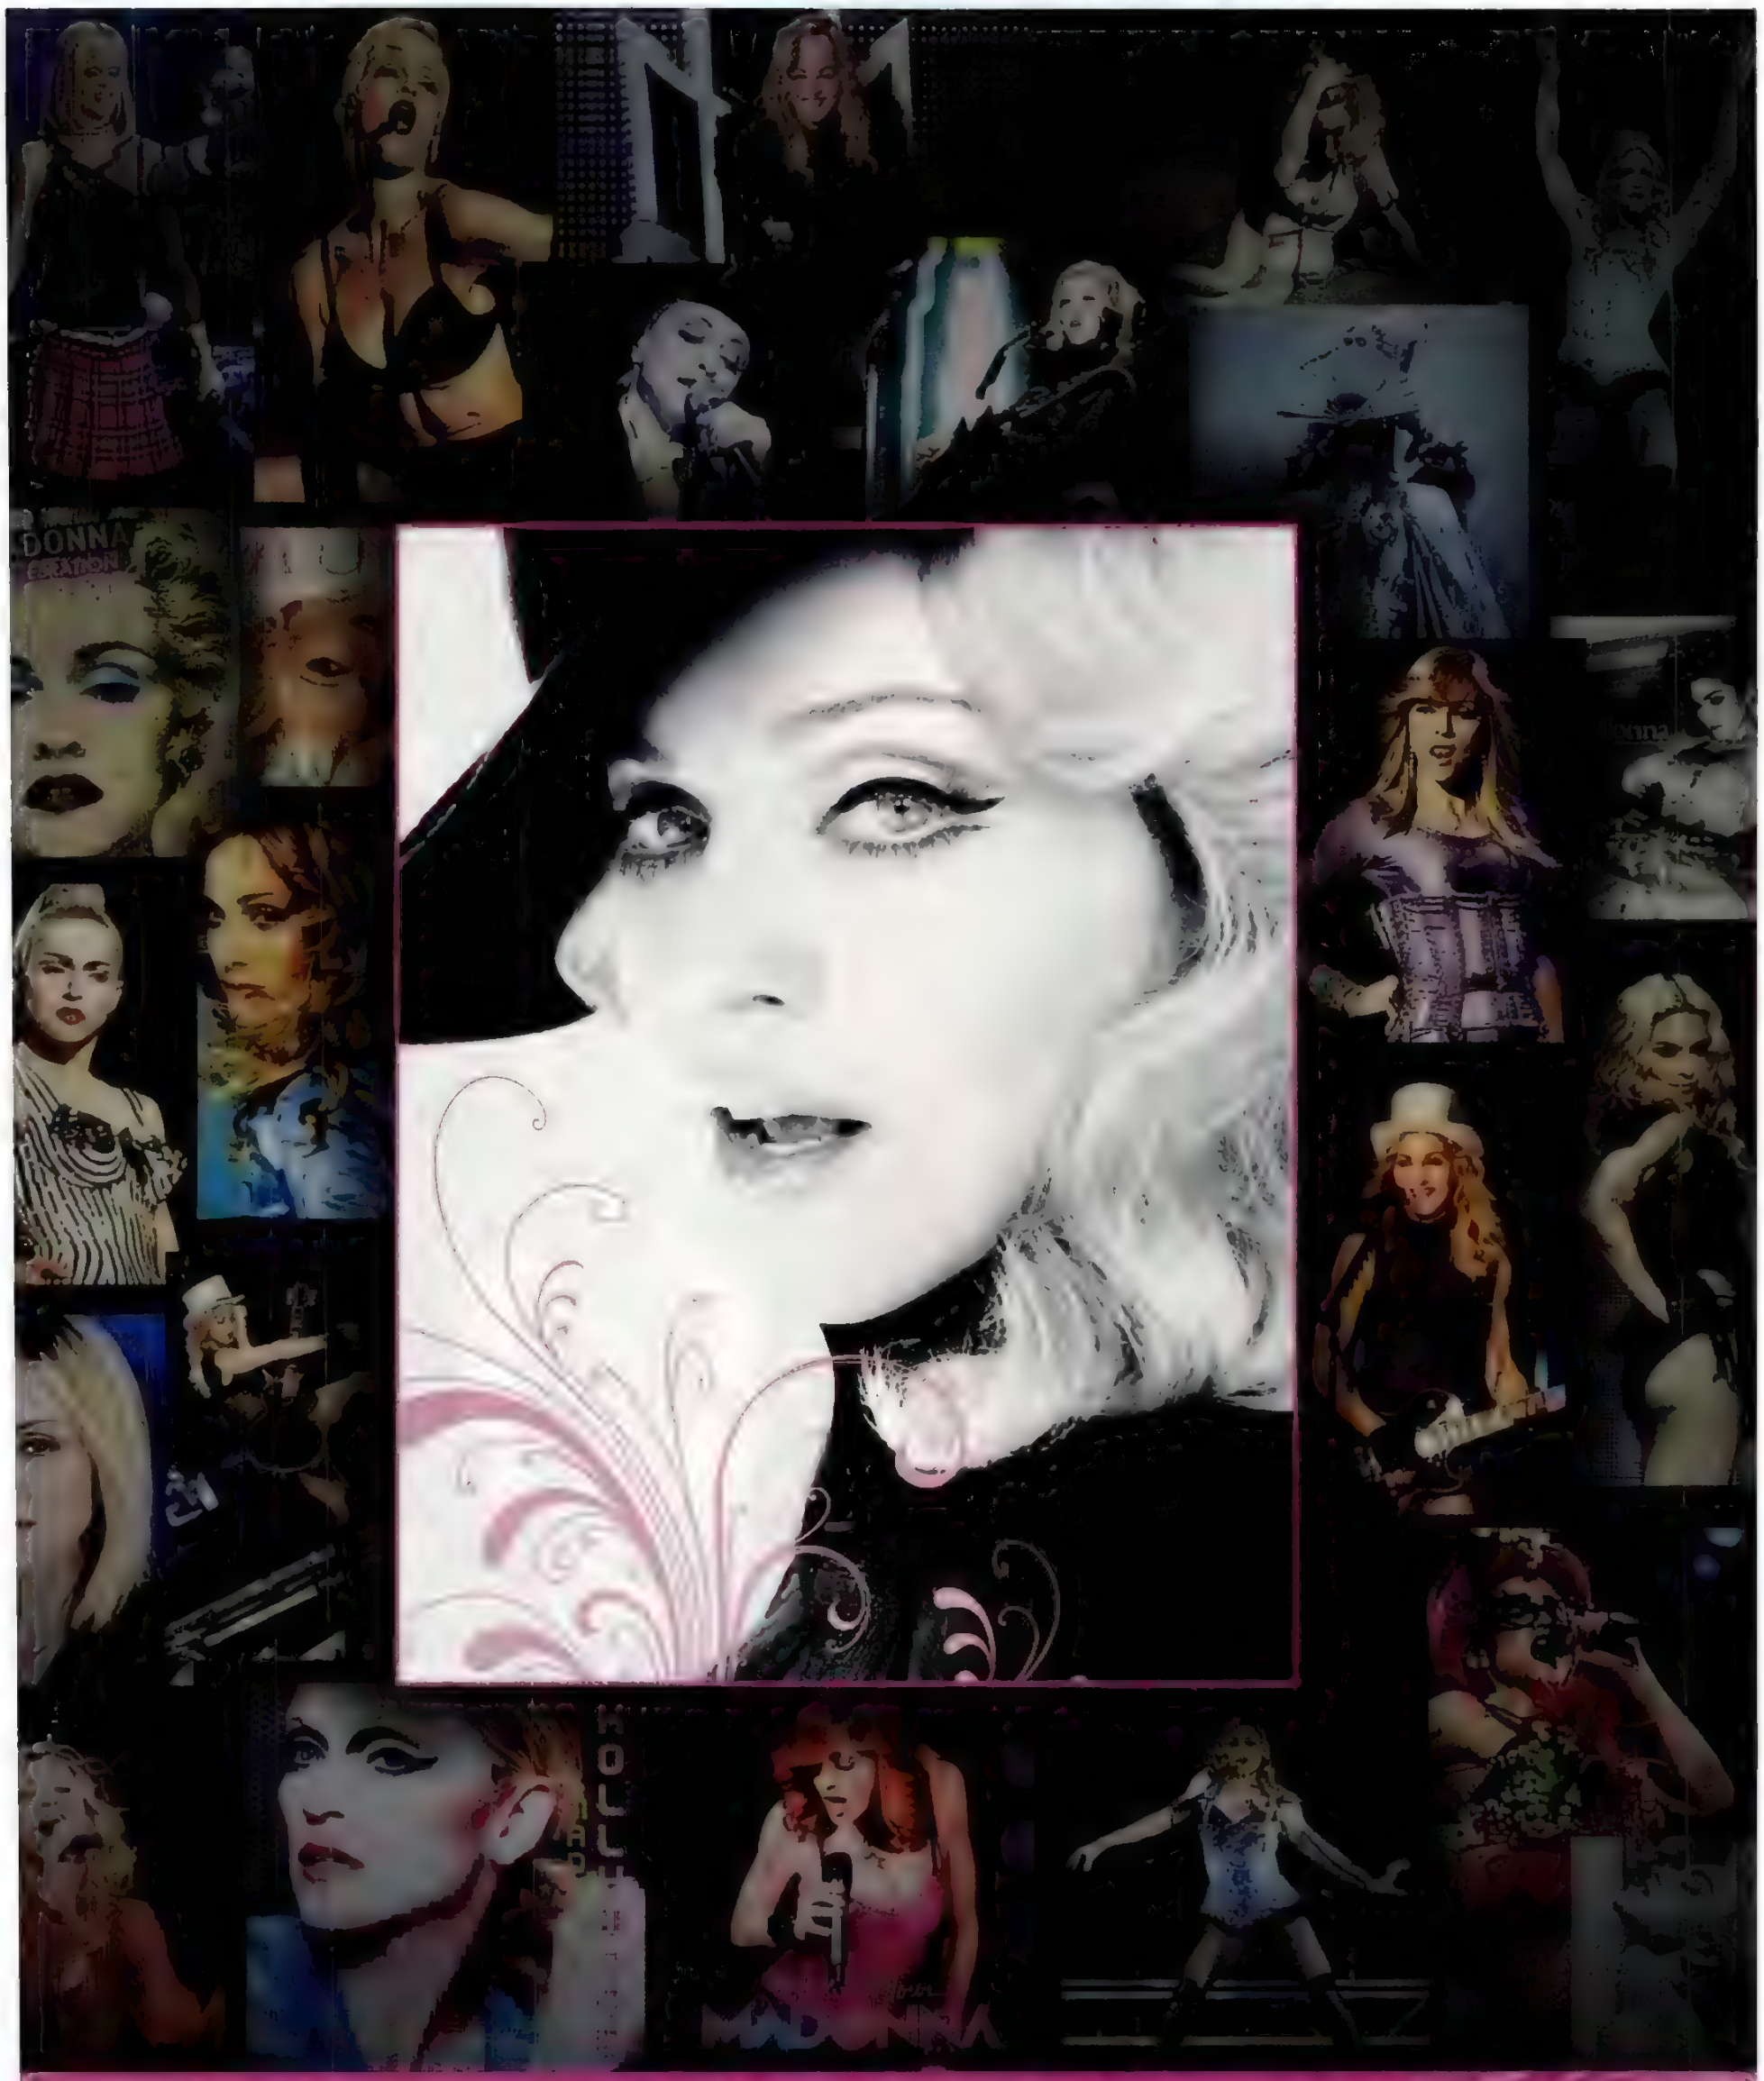
I was definitely stepping out of my comfort zone in terms of how people have seen me in the past. To see the reviews come in and them being positive and the ratings come in and the fans were so wonderful and made a point to watch, it made me so thankful and so happy.

Do you have a single favorite moment from the past year?
The high moment of this year was my Fearless tour. Every night of that tour felt like a celebration. I never expected it to be as successful as it was.

And what about a low point?
[Pauses] I've had a few days—and everyone has them—where you feel humiliated or you're shocked by something or something knocks you down a few pegs. But in those moments I've been very quick to realize and remind myself that there are people out there with real problems. To get hung up on any bad moment that happened this year would be unfair to all the go moments I've had this year.

Are there careers that came befo you that you tried to learn from
When I was growing up I did watch much kid television. Whe was 10 I watched a special on Fa Hill and how she went to Nashvi and made it in country music watched how Garth Brooks kept t ticket prices low. I watched how Sh nia Twain was able to be a blend different genres. I just love what I p to do so much that there's neve moment of my day when I'm n thinking about a certain aspect of and there's never a point when I fe like I know all I need to know abo the music industry.

Have you had time to write am all this craziness?
I actually am best writing on the ro I only have time to write the songs t hit me the hardest. Those are sor like "Fifteen"—that's one I wrote the road. It hits me and I needed write it so I found time to write whether it's 15 minutes between me and-greets or at 4 a.m. If they hat me throughout my meet-and-gre and interviews, and all I'm playing my head is this song, then I know I got something.



I'm well into writing my n album. I think my biggest goal this next record is to write in real ti as I always have. I want to contin to write about things that I'm go through. My first record was my di from my early teens. My next was diary from 16 to 18. My biggest h for this next record is that the f ings I'm feeling right now will be curately portrayed.

So what's left for you now? Will see an album next year?
My next goals are to continue on w the Fearless tour. I'd love to be a to perform on the Grammys ag They gave me a unique opportu last year to perform a song I ha even released as a single. Obviou I'll be making my third record. I'l taking time to make it everything got dreamed up in my head so fa like to have about two years betw records—so possibly next year.

For the full version of this Q&A, go t Billboard.com.

"I hope for my next record that the feelings I'm feeling now will be accurately portrayed."

SWEET HARMONY

Creative Collaborations Between Brands And Musicians By Eleftheria Parpis

Ad it up: CEE-LO GREEN for Coke; Estelle for Crystal Light; U2 for BlackBerry (from left)

THE POTENTIAL SYNERGIES between consumer brands and the music industry have never been more important to explore. With total ad spending down 15% in the first half of 2009 compared with the first half of 2008 and ad spending on music down 16% in the same period, it makes sense that an increasing number of marketers and musicians are interested in essentially doubling their promotional weight, both on- and offline. Here are three campaigns whose clever creative strategies have boosted the profiles of both the brands and artists.

COKE GETS HAPPY

For Coca-Cola, happiness is a five-note branding mnemonic turned into a song heard around the world. The effort, a collaboration with Atlantic Records for the soft drink's "Open Happiness" campaign from Wieden + Kennedy, stars a genre-bending mix of artists: Cee-Lo Green, Fall Out Boy's Patrick Stump, Panic! at the Disco's Brendon Urie, Gym Class Heroes' Travis McCoy and Janelle Monáe. Producer Butch Walker and Green co-wrote the nearly four-minute track released in March (the mnemonic was written by music and sound design agency Human) through MySpace—where it's been streamed more than 700,000 times—and iTunes, where it reached No. 27 on the retailer's pop chart in the United States.

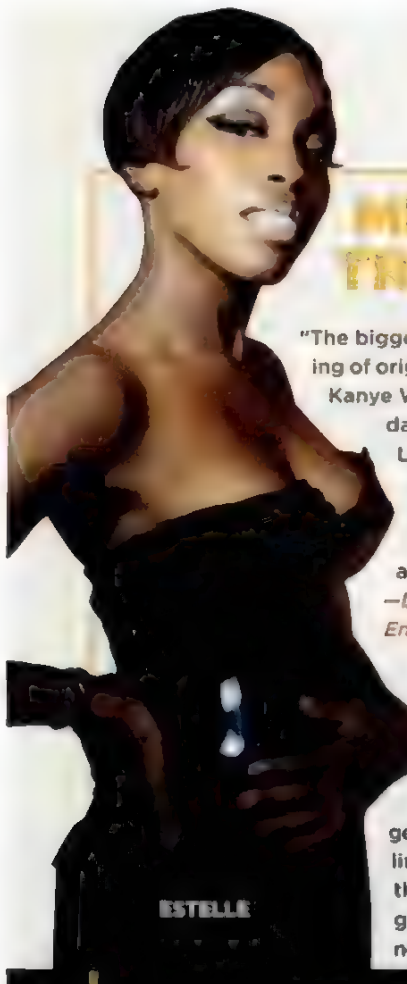
The song was used in ads that aired in 31 markets, with spots including eight customized versions with local artists (such as Leehom Wang in China, whose version reached No. 1 on the Top 100 chart of search engine Baidu.com). In July, a music video—as stylistically fanciful as Coke's animated "Happiness Factory" spots—premiered on MTV. And the song is keeping its buzz on: So far, it has inspired more than 100 user-generated versions on YouTube, and this winter it will be heard at various venues during the Olympics in Vancouver.

According to Camille Hackney, senior VP of brand partnerships and commercial licensing at Atlantic, the collaboration—orchestrated by companies including Brand Asset Group and Crush Music Media Management—is helping to keep the artists top of mind as they each prep upcoming releases.

FROM AN AD . . . TO AN ALBUM?

Atlantic Records artist Estelle had a very good night at the Grammy Awards in February. Not only did a Crystal Light spot launch during the show with an upbeat song she wrote and sang—one of two spots featuring the song in a campaign from Ogilvy & Mather—but she later won her first Grammy for the song "American Boy." (Crystal Light owner Kraft Foods was no doubt pleased as well.)

In the spot, Estelle belted out the upbeat "Star," which she wrote for the powdered drink mix. The commercial included a URL where visitors could download free copies of a full-length version of the song. Within the first week, the song was downloaded 20,000 times, according to Ogilvy Entertainment president Doug Scott. A month later, it was put up for sale at online retailers including iTunes and Amazon. Ten months after its debut, Atlantic says the brand-inspired song is being considered for inclusion on Estelle's next release, which is expected in mid-2010.



The campaign, Atlantic's Hackney says, "was another platform to help build [Estelle] and her brand. We collaborated and got a fantastic song out of it . . . And you never know, we may make it into a single. We're still h ing those discussions."

U2 LOVES BLACKBERRY

In an eyebrow-raising switch brand partners, U2 linked with Bla Berry to help promote its 2009 albu "No Line on the Horizon," five ye after starring in an Apple ad and coming the first band to get its o branded iPod. BlackBerry's ca paign, which touts the messa "BlackBerry loves U2," included clusive sponsorship of the ban 360° tour and a 60-second spot fr Arc that launched in July.

Timed to the album's release a the tour's kickoff, the commercial tured a live performance of the b in a shower of glittery sparks play "I'll Go Crazy If I Don't Go Cr Tonight." In the fall, the deal's m innovative element was introduc a BlackBerry app that includes sor videos, pictures, a link to the U2 m bile store and a news feed that se users updates every time a band m ber posts to the U2 blog.

A soon-to-be-activated soc networking feature will allow c certgoers to mark their seats o map of each venue and locate communicate with other fans at shows. "We're reinventing album experience for the dig age," said Jeff McDowell, VI global alliances at BlackBerry ma Research in Motion, at the tim the app's release.

MUSIC BRANDING TRENDS IN '09

"The biggest trend was the commissioning of original music by brands, be it the Kanye West 25th-anniversary Air Jordan deal or the Estelle Crystal Light deal. More and more brands are not necessarily only looking to license music but looking to collaborate with artists to make original music."
—Doug Scott, president of Ogilvy Entertainment

"Artists are being discovered and in turn working with brands through social networking. Bands are also becoming popular well before they get a label deal. If a band has an online following of a few hundred thousand fans, it is like a focus group. With the whole music business changing, artists are looking at our industry more than ever, and beyond that 30-second spot."
—Mike Boris, senior VP/executive music producer at McCann Erickson

"The most notable branding initiative in the music space has been Apple's non-use of cool songs in their TV ads—notable because Apple's use of such songs was the talk of the town in the ad-music continuum for the last few years and no brands have successfully filled that vacuum. Apple has recently used underscores with voice-overs to sell their iPhones and iPhone apps, utilizing music that's unique in its overuse of an acoustic guitar and glockenspiel instrumental combo—a sound that many in my field would complain is 'the Apple sound' that other clients requested a bunch this past year for their own underscores."
—Josh Rabinowitz, senior VP/director of music at Grey Worldwide

Nashville's Broken Bow Beats The Indie Country Odds

By Cortney Harding

MUCH LIKE BECOMING a Mafia don, finding yourself at the top of Billboard's Top Independent Labels list can be a double-edged sword. On one hand, it means a label has made it, slayed the competition and sold records in an ever-declining business.

On the other hand, just as many Mafia dons end up at the bottom of the Hudson, so do labels that have topped this chart in recent years. Indeed, both Artemis, which reigned supreme for two years, and TVT, which held the top spot for five, have since closed up shop.

Broken Bow, which tops the list in 2009 (as well as the Top Independent Imprints tally), not only faces the challenges of being an indie label, but also being an indie country label—a breed not known for longevity. The streets of Nashville are littered with the remains of folded labels, including Equity and Category 5, but Broken Bow has proved its staying power. The label first appeared on the Top Independent Labels list in 2006, hung on in 2007 and came back this year; Broken Bow's superstar artist, Jason Aldean, didn't release an album in 2008. Other artists signed to Broken Bow include Dean Brody, Blake Wise and Krista Marie.

Much of Broken Bow's most recent success is due to Aldean, who is also No. 1 on the Top Independent Artists list. His album "Wide Open," which was released in April, has sold 813,000 copies in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The hard-rocking first single, "She's Country," topped Billboard's Hot Country Songs chart, despite sounding more like an AC/DC track than a honky-tonk number, and has sold 1 million downloads. Additionally, the single "Big Green Tractor" has sold 939,000 downloads, while "Hicktown" has shifted 403,000.

Aldean was literally on his way out the country music door when Broken Bow picked him up. "I'd had a bunch of deals fall through and was getting ready to leave Nashville when some folks from Broken Bow came to one of my last shows," Aldean says. "I pretty much had my bags packed when they called and signed me."

Although he wasn't terribly familiar with Broken Bow before he joined the roster, he's been pleased with its management style. "Other labels want to steer the ship and they let me do what I want," Aldean says. "They have a very good team, and I have no complaints."

That team includes label GM Jim Yerger, who credits Broken Bow's independent spirit and commercial success to founder and funder Benny Brown, who started the label in 1999. "Benny lives in Northern California, and he's always been a country music fanatic," he says. "He started out trying to introduce California artists to Nashville, but quickly ran into a lot of politics and had labels turn him down. He decided at that point to start his own venture." Brown funded the label himself using proceeds from his investments in real estate and auto dealerships.

But all the money in the world can't guarantee an artist will break at radio, still the top measure of success in the country world. Broken Bow has managed to beat the odds for a number of reasons, including ignoring the usual artist promotion hierarchy and not being afraid to shop a unique track.

Scott Mahalick, PD at KUPL Portland, Ore., and director of FM programming for Alpha Broadcasting, says Broken Bow made Aldean a priority even when former labelmate Craig Morgan had a more established career. "In other words, no seniority list," Mahalick says. "T seem to run like a non-union shop. They sh cased him in Vegas at the [Academy of Co try Music] Awards on Freemont Street and m sure all the radio guys were VIPs at his big st performance. We were standing with reg people with real and excited reactions fr everyone that was there. They brought hir dinner and a visit, not to play or promote. It real bonding and relationship-building."

Bill Hagy, OM/PD at WXBQ Bristol, credits Broken Bow's timing. "I'm sure B ken Bow saw an opportunity and was com ted to pushing songs like 'Hicktown' 'Johnny Cash' because there was nothing like the sound of these songs. The label, A artist management and whoever the other p ers are had their crystal ball on full magnif tion. Add to this the label efforts to keep Ald 'radio-friendly.' To wit, Jason Aldean has gotten too big for his britches to date."

Yerger says at this point, he's not sure whe Broken Bow represents a new trend in the co try market. "We're not paying attention to o labels at this point," he says. "I think the big trend you're going to see is artists coming major-label deals and starting their own lal But I've seen enough labels come and go to k I can't really predict anything."

Additional reporting by Ken Tucker.

BREAKING AND ENTERING

While It Remains To Be Seen If Others Can Replicate Broken Bow's Success, Here Are Five Of Its Most Effective Strategies

1 DON'T TRY TO REMAKE YOUR ARTISTS Jason Aldean says his favorite thing about Broken Bow is that he was never asked to change, and label GM Jim Yerger agrees that giving an artist freedom should be a top priority. "We never change an act or their sound," he says. "People are really drawn to Jason because he's a quality guy and they can tell he's sincere and genuine."

2 LEARN FROM YOUR MISTAKES, AND MAKE SURE YOU HAVE PLENTY OF CASH ON HAND WHILE YOU'RE LEARNING Yerger says the label had been around for four years before it signed breakout artist Craig Morgan. "We kept grinding at it, and we were able to keep going because we had money and tenacity," he says. "There was never a point where we were trying to do it on a shoestring and a prayer."

3 SEIZE DIGITAL OPPORTUNITIES, EVEN WHEN OTHERS IN YOUR MARKETS ARE SLOW TO DO SO "When the album came out, we did all the traditional stuff, but we were also very aggressive in terms of digital and mobile," says Bob Morelli, president of RED, the label's distributor. "We went to iTunes with sessions and deluxe versions, and we went to mobile carriers to position the tracks. We wound up with 'Big Green Tractor' as the No. 1 ringtone, the first time ever for a country act, and we did it because we targeted Jason's younger audience."

Morelli adds that RED focused on connecting directly with consumers. "We have 50,000 people on our in-house country e-mail promotion list, and we reached out to them," he says. "This isn't something that's typical in the country market. But we were doing everything, like loading his songs onto online jukeboxes and really getting targeted with our [search engine optimization] and online ads."

4 NO MATTER HOW MUCH OFFBEAT PROMOTION YOU DO, RADIO IS STILL KING—AND CONFIDENCE MATTERS TO THE KING "They are the little label that runs a competitive, full-scale promotion operation," says Scott Mahalick, PD at KUPL Portland, Ore., and director of FM programming for Alpha Broadcasting. "They feel and act and, in some cases, beat the bigger labels. I think the proof on breaking through is in the hits. They have a mega-star in the making and know how to use him."

5 DON'T BE AFRAID TO EMPHASIZE THAT YOUR ARTIST IS A STAND-UP GUY, LITERALLY "One other promotion we're doing with Jason involves sending life-size stand-up cutouts to retail," Morelli says. "We're planning on placing 2,000 more around the country. They are pretty hard to miss." —CH

Music Publishers Seek Compensation For Bundled Lyrics In Music Downloads By Ed Christman

WHEN APPLE UNVEILED ITS new "iTunes LP" format in September, label executives applauded the initiative because they hope the inclusion of artwork and other digital extras may help spur album sales.

Music publishing executives like iTunes LP too, but for a different reason. They see it as a way to fulfill a long-cherished goal: to generate incremental revenue from the inclusion of lyrics with album and single-track downloads (Billboard, July 22, 2006).

"I don't know what the amount will be but there should be an additional royalty on top of the current royalty and I don't expect it to be an unreasonable amount," the head of a leading independent music publisher says, echoing a sentiment that's common among other top publishing execs.

Collecting a royalty when lyrics are included in music downloads sounds like a straightforward proposition. But it would represent a fundamental shift from how publishers have historically treated the inclusion of printed lyrics in physical albums, where they have typically allowed labels to include the words to their songs in CD booklets without additional charge. If music publishers succeed in getting royalties when their lyrics are included with digital track and album downloads, it raises the possibility that they'll seek the same compensation for printed lyrics that accompany CDs.

"The way it has been handled in the past on physical albums may be different than the way it will be handled in the future," an indie publishing executive says.

The publishing industry's efforts to secure royalties in these cases is part of a broader campaign that picked up steam in 2009 to monetize online use of song lyrics. In recent years, the National Music Publishers' Assn. (NMPA) has sent cease-and-desist notices to hundreds of Web sites posting lyrics without permission. But in August, peermusic, Warner/Chappell and Bug Music filed copyright infringement suits against Web site operators that posted lyrics without permission (Billboard.biz, Aug. 24), marking an escalation in the industry's efforts to secure proper compensation for lyrics.

Lyric search engines and other third-party sites seeking permission to reproduce lyrics typically go through Sony subsidiary Gracenote or LyricFind, both of which licenses lyrics from publishing companies.

Some publishing sources suggest that Gracenote could become the vehicle supplying iTunes with the ability to include lyrics in a download. Gracenote VP of business development Ross Blanchard says the company isn't working with iTunes on the lyrical component of iTunes LP, but adds, "There is a role for us to play in this. We could make life easier for all involved."

An iTunes spokesman declined to comment. Sources say that so far labels have been approaching music publishers on an album-by-album basis to secure permission to include lyrics with iTunes LP downloads.

Another publishing source suggests that iTunes may be trying to cut a deal with the NMPA on including lyrics with downloads. NMPA president David Israelite wasn't immediately available for comment.

iTunes lists 24 LP titles, ranging from catalog albums to new releases. The LP listings for the Doors' self-titled debut album, the Grateful Dead's "American Beauty," Paramore's "Brand New Eyes" and John Mayer's "Battle Studies" explicitly mention that lyrics are included with the download.

While some publishing executives are adamant that they should be paid royalties for lyrics that are included in downloads, they aren't sure whether the labels or iTunes should have to pay them. Major-label executives say that iTunes would be doing the paying, either to GraceNote or to the publishers directly or through the labels, the w it handles payments for pass-throu mechanical rights on iTunes digi downloads.

Some music publishers hope to c lect royalty payments from iTunes a other prospective online retailers i terested in selling music downloa with lyrics. That's because such arrangement would finally provi publishers with a way to audit digi sales, something they've long soug But if neither Gracenote nor t NMPA reaches a deal with Apple, th publishers would have to rely on bels to distribute whatever royalt Apple agrees to pay for lyrics.

A senior executive at an indie pu lisher says, "Our ultimate goal is to paid a rate, a penny rate, and we wo be supplied that data directly throu to us or our agent."

How much revenue is at stake? iTunes starts delivering lyrics w every song, then there might be a gr business there," an executive wit major publisher says.

A top official at an indie publis qualifies that expectation: "Will it a huge business? No. But it could a meaningful business."

AGENDA ITEMS

Bright Ideas For Publishers In The Coming Year

"We need to make song licensing easier. That is sort of an umbrella statement in that it covers everything from having a meaningful commercial dialogue with media users to having discussions with societies around the world and conversations in our shop about business procedures. The world is changing rapidly due to technology and the result is that everyone's expectations about how easily and quickly things can be done has accelerated. Music publishing is the song-licensing business, and we have to make it easier."

—David Johnson, chairman/CEO, Warner/Chappell Music

"A good idea for the new year is for music publishers to go back to their roots to the early 1900s when they actually produced and licensed music versus what they do now, which is just licensing music. Back then, they produced the music and licensed it for piano rolls. Or they would commission composers to create musical works and then go out and hire orchestras to perform it. Today, we need to be more involved in the creation and production of music. While that may sound like an endorsement for publishers to become record labels, it is—but not as we know the labels today. We started the 429 Records label with Kings of Leon and signed a band [called] the Features, where we made videos and helped with tour support and did a lot of other things. Most publishers are not involved in the next step of manufacturing, marketing and promoting records. But with digital distribution, we service music to over 60 different retail outlets now."

—John Rudolph, CEO, Bug Music and promotion. If you own masters, do the publishing and run management, that's a 360 deal, although we don't do any merch stuff because we don't know that world. Artist development involves more right today than in the past and it requires more area of expertise. So for an artist like LaLa, we signe her to an exclusive publishing deal and paire her with producer Laney Stewart and are pay ing for them to record five or six tracks, and w are paying for radio promotion. She doesn have a label deal yet so there could be other in vestments to make before that deal is signe We may do a whole album for her."

The Top 10 Strategies Music Merchants Used To Move Product In '09 By Ed Christman

Simply the Best (Buy): CHICKENFOOT

TRANS WORLD EXPERIMENTS WITH PRICING

While other retailers have toyed with lower CD prices, none have gone as far as Trans World Entertainment did in 2009. Trans World, the largest of the remaining traditional music retail chains in the United States, persuaded Universal Music Group, Sony Music Entertainment and EMI Music, as well as a large number of indie labels, to participate in a test to price all CDs in certain stores at $9.99. By November, the chain had expanded the experiment to 118 stores in about 30 markets, securing wholesale pricing of about $6.50-$7.50 per CD.

After earlier stages of the trial demonstrated that the lower prices helped boost sales, the majors countered with concerns that it may be simply detracting sales from other merchants. So the latest phase of Trans World's pricing initiative is to examine whether the $9.99 price point generates enough incremental sales for it to be profitable for the labels without cannibalizing sales elsewhere.

As Trans World flirted with lower pricing, it protected its bottom line by closing about 125 stores and resisted drawing heavily from its $150 million revolving credit facility.

"The $9.99 experiment was quite impressive," Newbury Comics CEO Mike Dreese says. "You can walk into their store and see a statement being made with straight, clear marketing. It's the kind of experiment that this industry needs to engage in."

ITUNES OFFERS VARIABLE PRICING

As the world's dominant music merchant, Apple's iTunes store finally relented to calls from major labels to implement variable pricing on digital track downloads, charging $1.29 for hit songs and either 69 or 99 cents on other tracks. While the $1.29 price point has yielded fewer unit sales for hit titles, it has helped increase overall music revenue at iTunes. The repricing also demonstrated that consumers who didn't buy catalog tracks at 99 cents don't want them for 69 cents either. "It showed that flexibility on pricing was good for them and it was good for us," a senior distribution executive says. "It took some heat off the debate on how they sell songs."

AMAZON POSTS DAILY DEALS

Although it remains far behind market leader iTunes, Amazon's MP3 store continued to pick up market share thanks to initiatives like its "deal of the day" specials. While the promotion beg running in 2008 to keep customers returning a regular basis, it began having a real sales i pact this year. After Amazon featured Chrise Michele's album "Epiphany" as a $2.99 MP3 d of the day, the set debuted at No. 1 on the B board 200 for the week ending May 10. Simila Third Eye Blind's "Ursa Major" debuted on album chart at No. 3 for the week ending A 23 after Amazon featured it as a $3.99 MP3 d of the day.

Music onitor Network estimated that participating tailers posted average sales gains of 20% over st year's event.

EWBURY COMICS GOES SOCIAL

ie potential promotional power of online platrms finally kicked in this year for Newbury omics, a leading innovator among music retail ains. By exploiting its Facebook page, Twitter ed, Web site and e-mail list, "we can really move e needle on a given day," CEO Mike Dreese ys. For example, on Nov. 11, the chain alerted customers through its e-mail newsletter that would hold a four-hour sale on used CDs the lowing day in all stores. Then, on the day of e sale, Newbury posted word of the event on Facebook page and Twitter feed. The increased ot traffic from the flash sale enabled Newbury post a 342% surge in used CD revenue and d a 26% jump in the chain's overall profit for at day compared with the same day a year ear r, he reports.

"They are smart; they pay great attention to detail," one distribution head says. "They continue to play with just the right price message."

VERIZON STAYS RELEVANT

Apple's iPhone has revolutionized the mobile music market (see story, page 12), overshadowing nearly anything else occurring in the U.S. mobile music sector. But while AT&T retains exclusive U.S. rights to the iPhone, Verizon Wireless remains an important force in mobile music, with distribution executives deeming the nation's largest wireless carrier as the best in selling music. "Everyone is selling ringtones, but they are selling tracks and bundles," an executive says. "They are head and shoulders above the other carriers."

TARGET SNARES KEY EXCLUSIVES

Target is hardly new to music exclusives, having had exclusive dibs on such releases as Christina Aguilera's "Keeps Gettin' Better: A Decade of Hits" and John Legend's "Live From Philadelphia," as well as various deluxe versions of other albums. But 2009 marked the year that Target finally staked a claim for itself as a genuine contender for high-profile exclusives, landing Prince's three-disc set "Lotus Flow3r," which has sold 397,000 units, and Pearl Jam's "Backspacer," which has racked up sales of 384,000 units, according to SoundScan. The chain also opened a special section on iTunes, where it sells exclusive releases.

ALLIANCE STAYS DEFENSIVE

Distribution company Alliance Entertainment draws praise in the industry for taking a defensive approach to its business, which has enabled it to stay alive. In May, it completed a prepackaged Chapter 11 that removed some $800 million in debt from its balance sheet and made creditor Citigroup its new owner. Now that Alliance has addressed its financial challenges, a senior distribution executive says it has once again become aggressive in working with the majors on promotions and in exploring new retail and supply-chain models.

BEST BUY SCORES WITH CHICKENFOOT

At the beginning of the decade, Best Buy launched its own Redline Entertainment indie label. The imprint eventually became the vehicle through which the big-box chain released some of its retail exclusives. But in 2009, Best Buy executive Gary Arnold, who started Redline, signed the supergroup Chickenfoot to the label, with the intention of distributing the group's music through other retail outlets as well. Featuring ex-Van Halen singer Sammy Hagar and bassist Michael Anthony, guitarist Joe Satriani and Red Hot Chili Peppers drummer Chad Smith, Chickenfoot's self-titled debut album has sold 372,000 units in the United States, according to Nielsen SoundScan. In June, Satriani told Billboard that "Gary and Best Buy showed true commitment to getting the music to as many people as possible." ...

"MUSIC IS THE UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE AND WE SPOKE FLUENTLY."

"The USO tour was incredible. I got to see things I've never seen before, meet and connect with so many interesting, fun, amazing people, eat new foods, perform for thousands, gain new fans, and best of all, I got to play MUSIC every day. I was overwhelmed. I was so sorry about to the lives of the troops who are working so far away from home. It made me so happy to see the young American kids and teens rocking out to the music alongside Okinawan or Japanese natives. Music is the universal language. It knows no boundaries in age, color, or gender. It almost brought a tear to my eye to realize that what I was playing and singing was bringing people together. What an honor. I can't wait to do it again."

LAYING DOWN THE LAW

The Five Legal Cases That Defined The Year In Music By Ben Sheffner

ALMOST A DECADE AFTER the major labels launched their legal assault on Napster, cou are still writing the rules of the road for the music business' digital future. Companies can't set to build a business based on their users' infringement of copyright, courts had already ruled. I the precise meaning of that dictate remains in doubt. What steps must sites take to combat infrin ment? What are the proper penalties for those who infringe? This year, courts inched toward r olution of these questions, giving labels, publishers and artists a bit more certainty as they dec whom to work with and whom to sue. ■ Below are 2009's top five cases that will shape the futu of the business.

UMG RECORDINGS V. VEOH NETWORKS

In September, a federal judge in Los Angeles ruled decisively against Universal Music Group in the label's copyright suit against video-sharing site Veoh.com. UMG had argued to the court that Veoh was liable for copyright infringement by encouraging users to upload videos, which Veoh translated into the proper format, organized and categorized, then ultimately streamed to millions of web surfers—all without paying copyright owners. But the court held that Veoh qualified for a "safe harbor" under the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act, because the site followed a policy of promptly taking down videos upon notification from UMG and kicking "repeat infringers" off the site.

In the pre-Internet world, the burden was ways on the distributor to obtain proper licen before exploiting a copyrighted work. But ruling in the Veoh suit dealt a significant bl to copyright owners' efforts to maintain total c trol. Under the court's interpretation of DMCA, a Web-based company can enlist its us to upload unlicensed works, and it's up to copyright owner to issue takedown notice sometimes multiple times. If upheld on app the decision represents a major shift in po from copyright owners toward online com nies that rely on user-generated content.

CAPITOL RECORDS V. THOMAS-RASSET; SONY BMG MUSIC ENTERTAINMENT V. TENENBAUM

Of the more than 17,000 individuals the major labels targeted for downloading and "sharing" songs through peer-to-peer networks, only Jammie Thomas-Rasset and Joel Tenenbaum fought all the way to trial. They both lost badly. A Minneapolis jury socked Thomas-Rasset with a whopping $1.9 million verdict for ringing 24 songs, and a Boston jury ordered enenbaum to pay $675,000 after he admitted nfringing 30 works.

The labels announced in late 2008 that they uld stop initiating new suits against individ- file sharers, so more such trials seem unlikely. t the enormous size of these verdicts could e a lasting impact on all copyright owners who gate or even threaten lawsuits. The awards are der serious attack as unconstitutionally exces-, and in one or both cases, the court could e the unprecedented step of ruling that the nstitution limits copyright statutory damages. ce such a determination would deprive copy- ht owners of a powerful defensive tactic, it uld likely make the enforcement of their rights re complicated and more expensive. Depend- on the outcome of post-trial motions and ap- ls, the labels' victories against Thomas-Rasset Tenenbaum could prove Pyrrhic.

EDEN VS. THE PIRATE BAY

asn't your average legal proceeding—it was t trial, part spectacle. And the case against operators of the Pirate Bay, the world's most ular access point to the BitTorrent file- ring network, was odd to U.S. legal ob- vers for another reason: It combined a minal case brought by the government of den with a civil copyright action pressed major record labels, movie studios and game blishers. But the end result was familiar to se who had witnessed similar fights in the ited States against piracy facilitators like ster, Grokster, Aimster, TorrentSpy and net.com: a verdict for the plaintiffs and sh punishment—a year in prison and an rd of $3.5 million in damages—for the four ividual defendants.

ut as with the earlier victories, the practical ort of the case is harder to pin down. Yes, it's her clear statement that facilitation of piracy legal. But the Pirate Bay's servers have al- y migrated several times to other countries, s can easily migrate to other similar sites, appeals will drag on for years. The case is a k reminder that even big legal victories don't necessarily translate into big reductions in copyright infringement. And there are lots of other Pirate Bay wannabes ready to step into the now-convicted defendants' shoes.

BRIDGEPORT MUSIC V. UMG RECORDINGS

If anyone still doubts that recording artists must obtain proper licenses before incorporating samples of others' works into songs, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit cleared up that confusion Nov. 4. That's when the court issued a decision upholding a jury verdict of $88,980 against Universal for sampling George Clinton's lyric "Bow wow wow, yippie yo, yippie yea" and the word "dog" from "Atomic Dog" in a 1998 song called "D.O.G. in Me" by R&B group Public Announcement.

Universal had contended that the sampling of the famous musical phrase was a fair use for which a license or payment wasn't required. But the jury didn't buy that argument, and the court of appeals held that the jury's verdict was "not unreasonable." The Sixth Circuit's ruling—not to mention more than 500 similar sampling lawsuits filed by Bridgeport—sends a clear message to artists and labels: If you want to sample, first get a license. And don't expect the fair use defense to protect you.

ARISTA RECORDS V. USENET.COM

In 2005, copyright owners achieved one of their most significant legal victories, when the Supreme Court held in MGM v. Grokster that peer-to-peer infringement facilitators could be held liable for "inducing" their users to infringe. But the Grokster decision didn't wipe out piracy, and its strong endorsement of the inducement doctrine hasn't resulted in a slew of subsequent court victories for labels and studios. Nonetheless, a federal court's June 30 decision in Arista Records v. Usenet.com was another setback for sites that seek to build a business based on users' copyright infringement.

Among the factors the court cited as supporting liability were Usenet's overwhelming use of the service for infringement, the fact that the site advertised the availability of infringing works and the technical assistance it provided to users seeking pirated material. The court also noted that Usenet could have, but refused to, employ filters to block downloads of infringing material. Though Usenet may be a relatively small and obscure corner of the Internet, the ruling could still pressure other questionably legal online services to take concrete steps to combat user piracy. And the court's opinion will be cited for years to come by copyright owners seeking to shut down more visible, and harmful, piracy-facilitating sites. ••••

SING IT LIKE YOU MEAN IT

How Soundtracks Can Resonate Without Being Part Of A Franchise By Ann Donahue

Screen gems: 'Glee' (top) and 'Hannah Montana: The Movie'

IN 2009, THE SECRET TO SELLING A soundtrack was simple: Be Hannah Montana, be a vampire, or be Michael Jackson.

The soundtrack to "Hannah Montana: The Movie" (Disney) finishes the year at No. 1 on Billboard's Soundtracks chart, with 1.7 million copies sold in 2009, according to Nielsen SoundScan. The "Twilight" soundtrack from Atlantic finishes second, with 1.2 million, and "Michael Jackson's This Is It" on Epic rounds out the top three with 965,000.

But if the Disney machine/undead/pop icon career paths aren't open to you, it's valuable to look at the soundtracks to Fox's "Glee" and Fox Searchlight's "(500) Days of Summer" for instruction on how to get film and TV music to resonate with paying customers. In both cases, their usage of music was more than a place-filler—it was emotionally resonant to the story—and the projects were written from the ground up with music in mind.

"Glee: The Music—Vol. 1" comes in at No. 8 this year, with 341,000 copies sold. It's notable for two reasons: Unlike most of the titles ahead of it on the year-end tally, it's not based on a preexisting franchise that gives it an automatic boost in awareness at retail. And while "Glee" does extraordinarily well in the demographic of women aged 18-34, according to analysis by Nielsen, it isn't quite a ratings barn-burner. The show averages around 7 million viewers each week, which puts it out of the top 25 of all shows on TV.

The conceit of the program means the soundtrack isn't traditional; "Glee" focuses on a high school glee club, and the songs on the soundtrack are versions of hits sung by the actors on the show.

"I feel like there's something about 'Glee' that connects in a different way," says Adam Anders, the show's music producer. "Our goal with 'Glee' is to not do karaoke and have all these sound like pop hits with jazz hands all over it. 'Glee' has heart, and the songs are used in a way that people just want to go buy it."

And unlike many projects where the songs are placed in a rush as the release date nears, Anders says "Glee" creator Ryan Murphy comes up with a list of songs he'd like to use in each episode at the script stage.

On the film side, Fox Searchlight's "(500) Days of Summer" went through a similar creative process. The movie earned $32 million at the box office, according to BoxOfficeMojo.com, a perfectly respectable number for an independent film. Its soundtrack sold 97,000 copies in 2009, placing it at No. 21 on Billboard's year-end soundtrack chart; the sou track to "Transformers: R venge of the Fallen," whi was 2009's biggest box-off grosser, sold 198,000 a ended up at No. 11.

"(500) Days of Summ screenwriters Scott Ne stadter and Michael Weber took the unortho

movie in the script befo they had a deal for the film to be made. Tha generally considered an industry no-no sin those songs cleared before the movie is into production.

But for Neustadter and Weber, the songs th picked stuck, including the Smiths' "Plea Please, Please Let Me Get What I Want," wh has a crucial role in the storyline.

Finally, there's another trend from the 20 soundtrack chart: Make your own movie or show. The deluxe version of Fabolous' "Los Way" includes a bonus DVD with a 30-min movie starring the rapper; it earns a No. 9 s on the year-end soundtrack chart with 278,0 copies sold.

Adult Swim's animated series "Metalocalyp
—about the fictional metal band Dethklok t show—sold 110,000 copies of its soundtrack, " thAlbum II," to land at No. 20. The show was

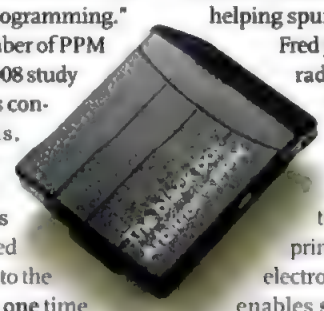
METER MADE



Arbitron's New Ratings Service Shakes Up The Airwaves By Paul Heine

A GIZMO NO BIGGER THAN A cell phone changed what consumers heard on the airwaves this year.

Arbitron's Portable People Meter ratings service—based on a device that detects inaudible codes embedded in radio broadcasts—expanded to another 19 U.S. markets in 2009. Now programmers in 33 of the top 50 markets have access to faster, more accurate data about how their audiences use radio. Arbitron plans to sign on 16 more markets next year.

The PPM is significantly affecting music programming—which, in turn, is yielding mixed results for labels and artists. Arbitron's old pencil-and-paper diary system tallied only those stations that listeners remembered to write down. But since the PPM detects even so-called "drive-by listening," mass-appeal formats where large numbers of listeners tune in for brief periods of time—such as mainstream top 40, adult top 40 and classic rock—are now accumulating higher ratings. On the flip side, formats that rely on small but dedicated audiences that stay tuned in longer are watching their ratings slip.

"The most generic, cume-friendly stations are rising, while the stations based on loyal fans are falling," veteran triple A programmer-turned-consultant Chris Mays says. "This is bad news for interesting, diverse radio programming."

Even before the number of PPM markets expanded, a 2008 study of eight major markets conducted by Annapolis, Md.-based research firm Research Director identified the formats most negatively affected by the initial transition to the meter. Smooth jazz, at one time a vibrant upper-demo format, lost 24.6% of its audience, while adult R&B declined by 17.2%, mainstream R&B/hip-hop 14.4%, classical 10.7% and Spanish 10.3%. Mainstream top 40, by contrast, saw a 5.3% gain, spurring broadcast chains to flip stations with low ratings to the format.

Already on a ratings hot streak, top 40 picked up new outlets in five metered markets this year: New York, Los Angeles, Dallas, Detroit and Baltimore. And four of those launches were in markets that already had top 40 stations. Labels say the new top 40s are helping them expose artists, accelerating the pace that songs cross over from mainstream R&B/hip-hop and rhythmic outlets, and helping spur sales.

Fred Jacobs, president of rock radio consultancy Jacobs Media, says the PPM initially spurs greater experimentation as programmers try to determine "what ends up printing in PPM." But since electronic measurement also enables stations to better spot which songs trigger tune-outs, some programmers claim the system has precisely the opposite effect—in fact, they say, it makes them more reluctant to program new music from unproven acts.

"Everybody is a lot more cautious," says Patrick Davis, PD at Clear Channel mainstream top 40 KHKS (Kiss) and adult top 40 KDMX (Mix) in Dallas. "The penalty for playing the wrong new music is immediate and powerful. When [listeners] switch over to your competition or even a flanker station, you have to wait for that radio station to make a mistake to get them back."

As a result, Davis says, songs are taking longer to develop—especially ones by newer acts. And sound-alikes have a better shot at airplay than acts with a distinctive style. "If something sounds like Lady Gaga and Lady G has worked for you," Davis says, " risk factor is lower."

Contentious debates persist o whether the new ratings system dercounts minorities and whet some listeners had tended to overs listening in the diary by "voting their favorite stations.

In Pittsburgh, mainstream R&B/hop WAMO had scored a sixth-pl
5.2% share of listeners aged 12-plu the market's final diary survey. Bu
September, the first month of comm cialized PPM ratings, the station m aged only half that share—2.6%— plummeted to 16th place. WAMO

let. Meanwhile, the Baltimore sta most negatively affected by the meth ology change was Radio One's m stream R&B/hip-hop WERQ, wh gave up its first-place spring finis

Still, not all urban and Hispanic lets have taken a hit. In Miami, n such stations either climbed in the ings or stayed steady after conver to the new system in June. In Den

OFF THE RAILS

Economy, Immigration Raids Cripple Latin Music Marketplace By Leila Cobo

THIS FALL, GEORGE LOPEZ became the first Latin comedian to host his own late-night talk show on an English-language channel. Last summer, the Spanish-peppered "In the Heights," with its merengue/salsa/bachata score, won a Tony Award for best musical. And currently, Shakira, a Colombian, is No. 31 on the Billboard 200 with the album "She Wolf."

And yet, despite the mainstream attention, Latin music, which a mere three years ago stood as a lone example of success amid declining music sales, is now enduring its worst downturn in recent memory. As a result, labels and artists are struggling to adapt to a new marketplace where CD sales are no longer the measure of success, revenue-sharing deals are the norm, and every penny counts.

For the week ending Nov. 22, sales of Latin music albums in the United States stood at 14.7 million units, according to Nielsen SoundScan, a precipitous 35% decline compared with the same period the year before. Even taking into account the expected upcoming surge of holiday sales, it's unlikely that will compensate for the loss, which is markedly higher than the 21% decline of Latin music sales posted for year-end 2008 compared with year-end 2007.

Even more alarming than the numbers is the fact that the sales drop accelerated as the year progressed. For first-quarter 2009, sales were down 31.3% compared with the same time the year before, according to Nielsen SoundScan. By midyear, they were down 33% and by the last week of September, they dipped yet again, by 35%.

In fact, Latin's decline outpaces that of the market as a whole, just as the genre's growth in 2005 and 2006 went against the general market's decline.

The reasons for the drop-off cited by numerous executives mimic the challenges facing the market as a whole, but their effect is magnified in a Latin marketplace that often lives parallel to the mainstream. Many retailers report that sales of all Latin product—including books and other non-music-related merchandise—have suffered. Because so many Latins work in construction and service industries, they may be disproportionately affected by the economic downturn and also by harsher anti-immigration policies.

"Our biggest account is Wal-Mart and when I speak with Wal-Mart they say there aren't as many people coming into the stores," says Johnny Phillips, VP of indie distributor Select-O-Hits.

More than the economy, raids aimed at illegal immigrants have been "fatal" for business, the managing director of one Los Angeles-based Latin retailer says. "Ninety percent of our business came from immigrants. That's gone now."

In addition, retail closures are doubly impactful for a consumer base that still overwhelmingly purchases physical product. "The Hispanic distribution network has broken down completely," says Marti Cuevas, GM of indie Premium Latin. This fall, for example, J&N Distribution, which fed product to dozens of small mom-and-pop stores, shut down, effectively severing a crucial link between consumers and their product.

But "because Hispanic people don't use digital the same way mainstream does," there are still "a lot" of small stores selling Latin music, according to Cuevas. "Many of them don't have computers. We're still dealing with a lot of new immigrants, and yes, they can afford to buy a CD."

Premium, whose roster includes top-selling act Aventura, is addressing the mom-and-pop issue by grabbing the bull by the horns. Beginning in late November, the label began to sell to these small accounts directly, offering the same prices it does mass merchants. Even if the accounts are small, Cuevas says, a sale is still a sale.

Phillips has also seen Select-O-Hits' Latin business grow from 15% of its total business in 2008 to 30% this year—not with big-selling releases, but with what he calls "niche" titles that may sell 10,000-20,000 units. "And if we have five of those, we suddenly have 100,000 copies," he says.

Beyond overcoming the lack of retail outlets, another challenge for Latin labels is revving up a digital marketplace that has consistently refused to come alive.

According to Nielsen SoundScan, for the week ending Nov. 22, sales of Latin digital albums stood at 615,000 units, a negligible rise over the 554,000 reported this time last year. Although that number represents 4.1% of total Latin albums sold—an increase over the 2.5% digital album sales represented in 2008—it's still a far cry from the 15% that digital album sales represent in the overall album market. And of course, it nowhere near offsets the decline in physical sales.

Still, Fonovisa/Disa president Gustavo Lopez says, "We are really focusing on the online marketing arena. We've been very aggressive about getting artists online, getting their sites up and building and guiding what they're doing."

Although it's hard to quantify the effectiveness of these efforts, digital sales, including mobile, now account for 20% of Disa and Fonovisa's net billing, up from just 5% last year, and Lopez estimates that percentage will grow to 30% in 2010.

And while music sales decline, th have been signs of stability and e growth, particularly in those ca where the focus has shifted fr merely moving CDs to a more ho tic approach that ranges from 360 d to revenue sharing. These approac encourage labels to not only inv but to also go out on a limb in sea of opportunities.

"Being an indie, and one with people working in the office, allow to switch lanes when needed with too much trouble," says Tomas Cc man, president/CEO of Nacio Records, which has grown its busir every year since its inception in 2("Whereas we love to go for sales, try to take an overall approach to g erating revenues."

WE CAN WORK IT OUT

In a dire year for the Latin music business, several success stories bucked the trend with a combination of ingenuity, marketing and simply good music. The following are five case studies and strategies that yielded sales or revenue.

AVENTURA

The top-selling Latin album of the year is Aventura's "The Last" (Premium Latin) at 211,000 copies, according to Nielsen SoundScan. Building on the group's already massive following, Premium invested heavily in a three-week TV spot campaign on the Univision network and nine in-stores throughout the country. Those were accompanied by heavy promotion including radio buys in each city and were a resounding success, with 2,000 units sold at the in-store in the Bronx, Aventura's home turf. Beyond the record sales, Premium has a percentage of Aventura's ancillary revenue and all the group's songs are signed to Premium's publishing company, a key factor in recouping its marketing investment.

TITO 'EL BAMBINO'

Formerly signed to EMI Latin, the artist went with indie Venemusic for his album "El Patrón" and broke ground with the single "El Amor." The track became a hit at multiple formats thanks to remixes with Jenni Rivera (for regional Mexican) and India (for tropical), in addition to a pop version. But the real success, Venemusic managing director Jorge Pino says, was in establishing a close A&R and marketing partnership between the label—which has invested steadily in "El Patrón" since its April release—and the artist, who has also invested. "El Patrón" has now been released throughout Latin America, and a Tito single will be featured on an upcoming Venevision soap opera.

THE PUERTO RICO CONNECTION

When Ednita Nazario debuted at No. 1 with her album "Soy" in November, more than 90% of her sales came from Puerto Rico. Small, manageable and enthralled with music, Puerto Rico is still a place to break artists and to focus marketing dollars for maximum success. Such was the strat egy taken by indie Top Spot with Luis Enrique's come back album, "Ciclos," before breaking it nationally. "Ou ground zero was Puerto Rico. That's where we wer going to put our money," says Jeff Young, president/CE of Venetian Marketing Group, who worked "Ciclos."

PRICING, LEVERAGE AND CROSS-MARKETING

Fonovisa celebrated its 25th anniversary and used th occasion to smartly market and position catalog and ke front-line releases with aggressive pricing and a focu on retail space. "We focused on hit product [for th anniversary] and it was a great strategy because w locked up space with retailers and used our TV cam paigns," president Gustavo Lopez says. "And we ma imized the Fonovisa brand. Everything was tied t gether." As a result, veterans like Los Tigres del Nor and such newcomers as Larry Hernández got spac positioning and, more importantly, a sales boost.

STAND BY YOUR ACT

Luis Fonsi's "Palabras del Silencio" ended the year as the third-top-selling Latin album despite having been released 18 months ago. Fonsi debuted with a bang in August 2008 and Universal Music Latino has stood by him since, working three hit singles in different formats to radio, supporting his fi extensive U.S. tour and releasing a deluxe edition of "Pa abras" last summer that repositioned an artist who a ready had multiple award nominations, TV performanc and a strong online following. "Our objective was alwa to present Luis Fonsi as the most important songwriter a new generation of acts," Universal Music Latino preside Walter Kolm says.

SYNCHS CROSSOVER

atin Publishers Broaden Horizons With ainstream Placements By Leila Cobo

THE LATIN WORLD, MUSIC lishers have long concentrated on nish-language media for synchs. at a time when any form of rev- e is crucial, they're increasingly ng the better-paying mainstream ket for opportunities.

he trick is getting niche repertoire ced in an extremely crowded mar- lace. "It's incredibly competitive," Karima Torres, who, as creative ctor of film and TV for peermusic, ne of few Latin publishing execu- s whose main focus is finding ements for Latin repertoire in the nstream market.

orres says placements have grown nentially since she started her job years ago (recent ones include tilina Mosh on NBC's "Chuck" Juanes on Fox's "Glee"), but not out a focused "marketing strat- to get on music supervisors' radar. hile peer's back catalog, which in- es many mambo and bolero stan- s, is in constant demand, getting material onto prime-time TV or a film is far more challenging.

he musical tastes that the film and ommunity have here are not al- in synch with what is popular in r Latin markets across the U.S. Latin America," says Tomas Cook- president/CEO of indie Nacional rds, which has found synch op- unities—from videogames to prime-time TV shows—for its mostly Latin alternative music roster. In the past year, Nacional's music has been heard in programs like "Ugly Betty" and "Entourage." The trick, he says, is making sure that the film and TV communities are aware of Latin repertoire through aggressive servicing.

Cookman has a competitive advantage in that his label's artists are also signed to his publishing company, Canciones Nacional, which lets him be agile in granting and pricing licenses.

"We are not afraid to say 'yes' to a low-fee usage, as in many cases it has come back to pay high dividends through future synchs, key promotional usages that generated massive promotion and other win-win situations," Cookman says.

Recently, he was approached by ESPN Deportes for the use of some tracks in a soccer-related promotion tied into the 2010 World Cup. Cookman proposed providing all the music on the program through a blanket license and making it an ESPN Deportes/Nacional Records music project. Now, he says, "there is revenue being generated, there is a promotional value as every track and artist gets on-screen credit during soccer's crazy time, and ESPN has a program full of kick-ass songs. We are always open to turn things like this around quickly."

Finding creative uses for the music, both in English and Spanish, is every publisher's dream. In 2008, Sony/ATV Music Publishing Latin America partnered with Sony Pictures for several advertising campaigns and a concert series for lifestyle brand Paco Rabanne.

"We licensed the use of our songs for the commercials and we took care of all aspects of the concert tour," says Jorge Mejia, VP of Sony/ATV Music Publishing Latin America and U.S. Latin, which is Billboard's No. 1 Hot Latin Songs Publishing Corporation for 2009. Mejia, who is restructuring his synch department, has seen that part of the business grow between 300% and 400% in the past five years. "That's the kind of business we're going after next year."

But during an economic crunch time, publishers also have to be creative in walking that fine line between pricing and promotion.

"You have to establish a win-win partnership," says Olga Cardona, director of administration and marketing for Universal Music Latin America. So if in the past an advertiser was willing to pay six figures for a big campaign, Cardona will work with available budgets for, say, regional campaigns.

The fact is, Cardona says, "album sales will go up or down, but the synch business will always leave dividends, whether with new releases or with back catalog." ....

TOP FIVE LATIN STORIES OF '09 1 U.S. Latin album sales plummet 35%. 2 Opposition by minority radio to Arbitron's Portable People Meter sparks an FCC inquiry and Univision Radio's refusal to encode its signal for the PPM in three markets. 3 Apple launches iTunes in Mexico. 4 Juanes performs Paz Sin Fronteras concert in Cuba. 5 Swine flu causes concert cancellations in Latin America.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Superstars Not Essential For Effective Latin Sponsorship Deals

When it comes to putting faces to a (brand) name, the biggest Latin acts have historically had first dibs on sponsorships and endorsements. After all, conventional wisdom would dictate that a sponsor would want to support an act with the widest possible audience.

But in a year of tighter marketing budgets, and as marketers seek to creatively target niches of Latin consumers, up-and-coming acts have benefited from everything from tour support to image campaigns that draw likeness and appearance fees as well as exposure.

Examples in 2009 included Western Union's support of Colombian singer/songwriter Fonseca's U.S. tour; Tommy Torres as one of the faces of Banana Republic's spring and summer campaigns; and Fanny Lu's spokeswoman duties for Caress. Other recent deals have landed Luis Fonsi's face on millions of Pepsi bottles in Puerto Rico (last year) and Tito "El Bambino" promoting Colgate in a two-year campaign that wrapped in April.

"There is a little bit of an opportunity for smaller acts because a company can say, 'They hit my demographic. They are not going to cost me that much money. I'll get full return on investment, and it works,' " says Eventus Marketing's Pedro Bonilla, who put together Fonseca's Western Union sponsorship while he was an agent at William Morris.

Crucial to sealing the deal were the timing and markets of Fonseca's tour, which coincided with a key period for money transfers to Latin America: Mother's Day. The sponsorship was a cash deal that also involved a bus with a wraparound ad, as well as backstage passes and meet-and-greets with Fonseca for fans, manager Felipe Jaramillo says. The tour's other presenting sponsor was Colombia Es Pasión, a government campaign to promote trade for the country and improve its global image. "They were able to invite a lot of their key clients in the U.S. for Colombian exports to Fonseca's concerts and have a bit of Colombia in their city," Jaramillo says.

Alex Lopez Negrete, president/CEO of marketing agency Lopez Negrete Communications, says cost isn't the main factor in some brands' decisions to partner with acts that don't have a huge audience. For Dr Pepper's "Vida a la 23" campaign, the soda brand wanted to target bilingual, bicultural Latinos aged 13-24 with eclectic musical tastes. He worked with producer Andres Levin and alternative artist Cucu Diamantes on an original Spanglish song for the campaign, "LA LA LA Life," that was used in TV and radio spots. A dedicated Web site also offered remixes and ringtones, and Dr Pepper shot a music video from which the commercial was cut.

"TV used to dominate," Lopez Negrete says. "Now you have digital involved very much front and center. What I see brands being interested in is, 'How can I sew this together better and have music play a more central role in all the channels?' " With developing artists, "you can cut multiplatform deals with them a lot easier," he adds.

Partnering with an artist who has yet to attain superstar status also lets the brand get its own image across without being overshadowed by the artist's. In the case of Torres' ads and in-store images at Banana Republic, "the consumer doesn't come in with a preconceived notion of who Tommy Torres is," says Jeff Daniel, president/CEO of Rock River Music, which commissioned and aggregated original songs from the artists used in the campaign. But "they can say, 'Banana Republic is authentic.' " Including an emerging Latin artist also allowed the clothing retailer to cover its bases in a broad range of genres, with a theme of musical discovery.

So when major acts hit the road again in 2010, will sponsors still support newer faces? "It is going to take a little while for companies to pay top dollar for the Manás of the world and the Juaneses," Bonilla says. "My hope is that big companies will see that there is a significant value in developing acts if they hit the correct demographics and the right targets." —Ayala Ben-Yehuda

KOREA OPPORTUNITIES

Has 'Three Strikes' Law Boosted Music Biz?

By Soo-Mee Park and Mark Sutherland

AS A SYMBOL OF THE CHANGING digital landscape in South Korea, one recent development spoke volumes.

In May, the country was finally removed from the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative's piracy watch list for the first time in 20 years. That followed the National Assembly's April approval of the world's first "three strikes"-type law aimed at curbing online copyright infringement. The amendment to Korea's existing Copyright Act took effect July 23.

That this former pirate's paradise should beat the likes of France, the United Kingdom and New Zealand to the anti-piracy punch seems remarkable enough. But interested overseas observers also claim the legislation is already making an impact.

"Over the last few years, the Korean market looked like a basket case," IFPI president/CEO John Kennedy says. "There was a danger of the music market completely disappearing. Physical sales were evaporating and the digital market was as close to 100% piracy as you can get."

But IFPI figures show digital revenue rose to 49 million won ($42.5 million) in the first half of 2009, up 32% over the same period the year before, while physical sales rose 5% to 40.8 million won ($35.4 million). The IFPI credits this growth to the educational effect of publicity surrounding the imminent new law and says preliminary figures show it has accelerated since the introduction of the three strikes policy, with digital revenue up 53% for the year through Sept. 30.

Local executives are less convinced the three strikes law is directly responsible, instead crediting earlier government anti-piracy measures. Indeed, the IFPI's own figures show the revival actually started in 2008, when recorded-music sales totaled $140.6 million, up 16% over 2007. But research from the government's Ministry of Culture, Sports and Tourism (MCST)—whose copyright enforcement division is responsible for enforcing the new law—shows the changing attitude toward piracy.

A September survey found 45% of those who admitted previously using illegal sites had reduced their visits to such sites since the introduction of the new law, while 21% said they had since tried legal sites.

On the face of it, the Korean system seems similar to those proposed in other countries. Rights holders who discover infringing material send a notice to the MCST, which checks the claim and passes it to the offender's Internet service provider (ISP), which notifies the offender.

Official figures haven't been released, but IFPI Asia regional director May-Seey Leong says she understands that around 500 first warnings have been sent since July 23, all recipients of which have complied with the order to remove infringing material.

"We have not issued any warnings yet," says Sandy Monteiro, senior VP of the Assn. of Southeast Asian Nations for Universal Music Group International. "The implementation of the three strikes policy was basically a psychological closing of the net on die-hard subscribers to illegal services."

While the law proved controversial when first proposed, post-introduction it seems to have avoided the widespread opposition from the public and ISPs that similar legislation has received elsewhere. Many credit this to a perceived emphasis on targeting offending sites rather than individual users.

Individuals can face measures including restriction of Internet access if they ignore the first two warnings, while offending sites—whether open peer-to-peer (P2P) file-sharing sites or the growing Korean phenomenon of invite-only "cyber lockers"—can be summarily shut down on the third warning.

"We are putting more emphasis on this law as an opportunity to encourage more [download] services to legalize and educate the public about intellectual property," says Kim Kyung-Nam, an officer at the MCST's copyright enforcement division.

That policy seems to be succeeding, with many formerly illegal sites converted to legit operations. Soribada, once Korea's most notorious P2P file-sharing network, now operates as a legal subscription service, with users paying 7,000 won ($6) per month for unlimited downloads. October, the MCST officially desi nated Soribada a "clean site," fr from copyright infringement.

"The stricter enforcement of r sponsibilities on operators of Web sit has forced them to either convert the businesses to legal services or sh down," says Monteiro, who says t number of services going legit "h forced a large portion of their users follow suit."

Other government anti-pira measures include the MCST's intr duction of the Illegal Copyrights O struction Program monitoring syste in March, when all download sit were also required to install filteri devices to trace unlicensed files.

No Korean ISPs would comme but one executive at a download s who asked to remain anonymous sa the various initiatives have "create very rigid environment on the Int net" that could confuse the public.

"It's like building a roof on top o roof," he adds of the three strikes la "It was redundant."

Surprisingly, none of the executiv lobbying for similar schemes in Fran and New Zealand that Billboard spo to had been monitoring the Korean s uation, but Geoff Taylor, chief exec tive of U.K. labels group BPI, says it h important lessons for other market

"Graduated-response measures their own are not the answer," he sa "But with education and a graduat response, you will steer people towa legal services and accelerate the grow of the digital market."

And Kennedy says sustained s cess in Korea can't fail to influen other territories. "This is an area wh nobody wanted to go it alone," he sa "If [governments] can see it's sor thing that's been embraced in diff ent places, it makes it easier for th to convince consumers that this is right thing to do."

A Status Report On Other 'Three Strikes' Legislative Efforts

UNITED KINGDOM
The Digital Economy Bill published Nov. 20 would, if adopted, oblige Internet service providers (ISP) to send warning letters to subscribers suspected of online piracy. It also contains provision for tougher measures, including temporary account suspension. Although May's general election could stall the bill's progress, "we hope it will be in force in the second half of 2010," says Geoff Taylor, chief executive of U.K. labels group BPI.

FRANCE
The "three strikes" Creation and Internet Bill gained parliamentary approval in September but hasn't yet been implemented. While the independent commission that will oversee the scheme isn't operational, insiders expect warning letters to be issued in early 2010.

NEW ZEALAND
A revised version of the Copyright Act's controversial Section 92A—introducing graduated-response measures—is awaiting Parliamentary introduction but could become law by mid-2010.

TAIWAN
Taiwan's new copyright law, passed Nov. 17, specified takedown procedures for unauthorized files, but not the promised graduated-response measures. The government wants any In ternet service withdrawa to be based on ISP/right holder consensus. Both par ties have agreed to observe the takedown system' progress for six month before further talks.

JACKSON REACTION

ow The O2 Coped With Losing Michael's 50 Gigs

Y MARK SUTHERLAND

Got to be there: Jackson fans created a shrine to the dead singer outside the O2 on July 13, the scheduled first night of his run at the venue.

NDON—Visitors to the O2 are left ittle doubt as to its achievements. The O2 Arena's recent Billboard ring Award for top arena is proudly played in the lobby of venue opera- AEG Europe's offices, while cubi- walls sport mementoes from the ny memorable nights there since it ned June 24, 2007. There's a photo on Jovi onstage on opening night. ere's a plaque commemorating nce's 21-night stint in 2007.

ut something is missing. By now, memorabilia should have been ed by something to mark Michael kson's record-breaking run of 50 ws. By rights, he should be 27 gigs the residency half-done, but his eback complete.

he glory of what could have been perished alongside Jackson on June 25. It also made for the toughest period in the O2's hitherto charmed life—and ruined vacation plans for thousands of fans around the world, including AEG Europe senior executive director/general counsel Sarah McGuigan, on holiday in Ibiza when the news broke.

"I thought my husband was joking when he told me," she says. "It was an absolute tragedy on a human level."

It had fairly serious consequences on a business level too. McGuigan declines to estimate the venue's lost revenue but, even for a building as heavily booked as the O2 (it put on 179 shows this year, not including the Jackson cancellations), 50 extra "dark" nights could have proved a body blow. Especially with bars, restaurants and nightclubs in the O2 complex relying on the arena's foot traffic for income.

McGuigan flew back the next day and, while the Los Angeles office dealt with the fallout surrounding Jackson's death, joined president/CEO David Campbell and senior executive director/finance director Alex Hill in forming a contingency plan. "We very quickly became realistic," she says. "People can't just drop in and play a building on this scale."

Instead, AEG took steps to diversify its business. With many fans making pilgrimages to the site, it staged "Michael Jackson: The Official Exhibition" and promoted other attractions, from its 2,350-capacity Indigo2 venue to roller discos.

The arena itself looked beyond music: Of the 14 dates rebooked so far, half feature non-music events, ranging from comedy (Michael McIntyre) to sports (England netball, supercross motorcycle racing) and other entertainment ("Walking With Dinosaurs," "Ben Hur Live").

McGuigan says this diversification will continue, although music remains the venue's No. 1 priority. Sure, one needn't worry about an animatronic Triceratops dying just before a run of shows, but O2 officials remain committed to residencies by flesh-and-blood musicians. This year, the not-notoriously-reliable Britney Spears did eight shows, while Bon Jovi's June 2010 run is currently at 10 and rising.

Describing the Jackson experience as "absolutely unique," McGuigan says the O2 wouldn't pass on booking an artist with health or other issues for a lengthy stint, as long as "we had confidence in them the way we did with Jackson."

"If we had concerns, we wouldn't do the deal," she says. "But Jon Bon Jovi looks pretty healthy to me."

The health of the wider U.K. live scene seems more open to debate. Some touring execs privately grumble about money being drained from smaller venues by the boom in arena/stadium gigs, but others maintain the levels of the live business operate in relative isolation.

"People who got refunds for Michael Jackson tickets didn't think, 'Great, £75 [$125] to spend on other gigs,' " says Matt Woolliscroft, a promoter with Manchester, England-based SJM. "They probably [spent it on] a meal or put it towards the holiday."

Meanwhile, back at the O2, the staff is plotting a way to top the Jackson residency that never was. "Can anything surpass that?" McGuigan ponders. "I doubt it. But there are other acts out there that could put on a huge number of nights in this building. We just hope we can get them here."

And you can bet AEG is saving some wall space, just in case. ••••

The UAE Emerges As A Music Power

By Andre Paine and Lizette Van Hecke

COLDPLAY'S VIVA LA VIDA TOUR traversed the globe during 2009. But one of its most memorable dates was an unlikely one: The band's rain-soaked, first-ever show in Abu Dhabi, which—alongside fellow United Arab Emirate (UAE) Dubai—has rapidly established itself as a live market for world-class acts.

"We've had many great crowds on this tour, and even on a dry and regular day, this lot would be amongst the top ones," Coldplay said on its official blog.

March's 15,000-sellout outdoor show in the UAE capital was staged by Live Nation and local promoter Flash. Flash managing director John Lickrish says it illustrated that "not only can we bring the artists in, there's also a really strong fan base."

In the past two years, Abu Dhabi has hosted shows by George Michael, Bon Jovi, Shakira, Andrea Bocelli, Christina Aguilera, Beyoncé and Aerosmith. Rihanna performs there New Year's Eve.

While the IFPI doesn't track UAE market data, executives report growing live and publishing businesses—although the long-term effects of Dubai's well-publicized current economic problems remain hard to predict.

Dubai, the UAE's most populous emirate, is the Middle East's live business hub. AEG Live launched there in February 2008, when Live Nation took a 65% stake in Dubai-based Mirage Promotions.

"Legal infrastructures and purposeful venues need to improve, but the UAE can only get better as a [touring] destination," AEG Live Middle East managing director Thomas Ovesen says.

The UAE has a reputation for big live paydays, but Lickrish says that "some of the figures thrown at me [by artists] can be a bit crazy; we just can't do it."

Those fees reflect a location that can take several days out of a schedule, but Flash is working with promoters to create a "viable touring circuit" linked with South Africa, Australia or Asia.

Dubai-based promoter Alan Davis says the live business has "grown massively" in five years—assisted by government initiatives, often including tax-free status—despite local idiosyncrasies including a large walk-up audience, a lack of suitable local support acts and cultural differences that require sensitivity.

Davis, who produced Robbie Williams' 23,000-capacity 2006 show at Dubai's Nad Al Sheba racecourse, says he'll shortly launch a new promotion company with undisclosed international partners.

While the live sector has been largely unaffected by the global financial crisis, Huss "Spek" Yoosuf, managing director of UAE-ba publisher Fairwood Arabia, says that an ad tising downturn in the first half of 2009 hit synch business.

Still, Yoosuf says he's encouraged by the itive mood at Dubai's first music confere Dubai SoundCity. The event, held Nov. 5-7, attended by 130 industry professionals; sp ers included veteran Australian promoter Mic Chugg and Radiohead manager Brian Mess

The UAE is also emerging as a legitin recorded-music market. Sony Music set up gional headquarters in Dubai in May, while Arabia (Warner Music's licensee) has bee Dubai for 15 years, and Universal license local label Music Master.

EMI has enjoyed local success with Leban Canadian artist Karl Wolf. Adrian Cheesley, president of the rest of world (Asia Pacific, S America, the Middle East and Africa), puts sales of Wolf's 2007 album, "Bite the let," at 10,000 copies—a m amount for the territory. He Coldplay, Williams, Norah J and Michael Bublé as other with strong UAE sales.

"It's the main market in t gion for physical sales," Chee says, adding that sales have " up" largely thanks to the six-store gin Megastores Middle East chain.

Megastores president Nisreen Shocair the stores sold 1 million CDs in 2008, with r toire traditionally "skewed more [toward] i national," although local acts' sales are climbing. "The Arabic consumer," she say beginning to love its own culture."

V Star plans a digital service "very soon," adds. It would join Nokia Music Store, G Arabia and telco Etisalat's download servic

While copyright law is in place, the doesn't have any collecting societies, s thing EMI and the IFPI are lobbying the ernment to rectify. "If [performance r income started being generated—particu in Dubai—it would be strong," Cheesley noting the UAE's many top 40 radio stati

As for publishers, Yoosuf says, "our ho to have a licensing structure in the form of a society—sooner or later."

And Davis expresses optimism about the ket's future. "The biggest promoters in the are here now," he says. "That's proof that th a market here—and I can see it getting b and bigger."

THE GREAT ESCAPE

Global Live Business Sets Records In Tough Economy

By Ray Waddell

IN PERHAPS THE MOST challenging environment the live entertainment industry has ever faced, the global concert business managed to put up record numbers in 2009, a remarkable testament to the resiliency of the business and the enduring popularity of live music.

Global data reported to Billboard Boxscore from Dec. 6, 2008, through Nov. 21, 2009, shows an industry that is up significantly at its best and flat at worst. And, at a time when economies are in turmoil, flat is the new up.

It was a year in which U2 and Madonna dominated Billboard's year-end tally of Top 25 Tours (see page 122), with Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band, AC/DC and Pink rounding out the top five. Elsewhere, Kenny Chesney staged the top country tour of the year, Tina Turner was the top-grossing R&B/hip-hop artist on the road, and Vincente Fernandez was the leading live Latin act, according to the year-end Boxscore recaps.

Looking at the overall strength of the live business, Creative Artists Agency managing director Rob Light suggests several aspects that helped. He cites entertainment's role in culture when times are hard, the development of new touring talent, prudent packaging, strategic routing and the growth of festivals as key factors in the year. "When you string all that together, it was an OK year. It was surprisingly healthy in light of the worldwide economy," he says.

The financial endurance of live entertainment indeed seems to give credence to the old mantra that entertainment is recession-proof. William Morris Endeavor Entertainment (WMEE) contemporary music head Marc Geiger says several "macro" forces influenced the year, among them the role of "escapist" entertainment in difficult times.

More specifically, the industry has become better at managing and pricing inventory, Geiger believes.

"It's about getting the price to the market, which is really what has held the concert industry back to a certain extent," he says. "It was somewhat greed-based, because nobody wanted to drop that back price. They said they were losing money as opposed to getting extra people in there. There is a market for the high end and there's a market for the back end. So if you start to tune to the market, you should be able to fill up the airplane better."

The shift of the music business economy from a recorded-music base to a live-music base also continues.

"It's pretty clear that the dollars [consumers] used to spend on recor music have shifted to live music," Bill Zysblat, partner in music busi management firm/tour producer F Productions. "What is remarkab that, considering the general econ ics of the world this past year, espec the ever-climbing unemploym numbers, that any measure of at dance could grow."

Worldwide, a record $4.4 billio box-office revenue was reported to score, an 11.7% increase over last and the second consecutive yea double-digit growth. Better yet, a tendance of 73 million represer 12.6% increase over 2008, an im tant trend for a sector of the busi that's now considered the most portant for the majority of artists

For North America, the news as positive, but still far from downer many in the media (but Billboard) had forecast. The $2.8 lion in box office is down 2% an 50 million in paid attendance is d 1.7%, but these numbers were ge ated from a 9% decrease in the n ber of shows reported.

The decrease in the number of shows can mean many things, but surely among them are a more selective talent-buying posture among promoters, more packaging of artists and more strategic touring—which for many may mean sitting the year out.

"Packaging has gotten much stronger, much smarter over the last couple of years," Light says. "I also think one reason there are fewer shows is that everybody—agents, managers and promoters—is smarter. And in a tough economy, that sort of victory lap where you go around the country or the world a second time didn't happen as much. I think people were smart enough to say, 'Maybe there isn't a second play. Let's skip it.' And that intelligence helps the original grosses, because you're not diluting the market, and probably cuts into why shows are down a little bit and attendance is up."

Such unreported events as casinos, private dates, fairs, festivals, clubs, less-than-successful shows and international dates boost the overall concert business to an estimated $7 billion-$8 billion, and it's possible that those unreported shows reflect where the economy had the biggest impact.

"There are a whole lot of things that aren't reported, so [Boxscore numbers] could be somewhat misleading," WMEE worldwide head of music Peter Grosslight says. "Fair budgets were down, symphony and performing arts budgets were down, the casinos weren't buying there for a while. When the crisis hit in the fall, there were certain types of buyers that were shell-shocked."

Average gross and attendance per show are up, in North America and worldwide.

Even so, for many, a more telling and positive indicator is a show-by-show analysis of the year. Worldwide average gross and attendance per show are up 11.3% and 11.8%, respectively. In North America, average per-show gross and attendance are up 7.6% and 8%, respectively.

Most would agree that the overall objective is to grow the audience, and on a per-show basis, that goal was accomplished in 2009. This marks the first time that attendance has outpaced dollars across the board in more than a decade—basically the from >>p52 post-consolidation era of the touring industry. Typically, gross vs. attendance comparisons have reflected higher ticket prices and lower per-show attendance, but 2009 was a year of pricing promotions, discounts and conservative pricing in general. Gross ticket prices were slightly down this year on average, again surely partly reflective of large-scale discounting.

"The reason more people went to shows is because [the concert industry] is starting to price and market concerts like other products, not just like concerts," Geiger says. "We're dealing with excess, unsold inventory better. We're talking now about filling up the stadium for the baseball game and not ignoring that there are bleacher seats and bleacher pricing, group sales and [promotions] and different programs."

AEG Live CFO Randy Phillips believes there has been a price correction of sorts, largely in reaction to tough-to-move lawn and arena bowl seats. "The spiraling ticket price inflation has definitely outpaced normal cost-of-living increases," he says. "While there is perceived value and a strong market for the best 10% of the house, there has been a serious devaluation of, at least, 30% of our available inventory, especially in the sheds where the number is far greater. My guess is this is one of the reasons attendance seems to be outpacing per-show grosses."

In general, ticket-pricing has become more savvy and flexible, Light believes.

"We're much more aware of ticket pricing and flexing the pricing in houses to being very adaptive," he says. "The homogenized ticketing of the tour for years, where you sort of pick a generic price and that was the price of the tour, that's gone away to where you might charge one price in the majors and less in the secondaries and tertiaries. That, added to how you scale the house in terms of seat level, capacity level, all add up to a b ter year-end result."

But if attendance is up for a chang "that doesn't necessarily portend trend," says Phillips, who points o that the concert business is still at t mercy of which acts are touring ir given year.

"The concert business is cyclic not a hockey stick, which is why it so difficult for a public company continuously show year-to-ye growth," Phillips says. "One cou argue that last year saw enormou successful worldwide tours by Britr Spears, U2, Madonna, etc. Howev we still do not know what artists a how many will fill those shoes n year or achieve the same level of att dance and gross dollars."

To look at the global numbers o in terms of U.S. dollars wouldn't p vide the full picture, Zysblat advis

"One year ago, €100 of foreign b office was $127. Today €100 of fore box office is $148," he says. "So, if y foreign box office per-ticket sold l remained constant in dollars, at le with respect to euros, prices have g up on average 16.5%, based on l year's rate of exchange, or 14.1 based on the current rate. Either w a significant increase."

Which, of course, speaks positiv to the fact that attendance numb held up globally. "To a European euro is still a euro," Zysblat says. " for them to pay more euros for the erage ticket than a year ago and c tinue to increase their attendanc events speaks volumes for the fut of live touring."

from >>p54 of gross and attendance. The promoter reported $2.5 billion in gross and 41 million in attendance from 9,085 shows this year. Even with all the discounts, that's a 25% increase in gross and a 19% increase in attendance, despite a 1.6% decrease in shows. Having U2 and Madonna on the road in the same year obviously provides a big boost to gross and attendance, but it appears the Live Nation strategy of aggressive discounting during the summer also helped, particularly as it relates to attendance.

Considering that Live Nation launched a ticketing company in 2009 and operated under the heavy scrutiny brought on by the company's proposed merger with Ticketmaster Entertainment, company execs maintained focus on their core business. Live Nation executives didn't respond to interview requests going into the end of the year, but earlier Live Nation music CEO Jason Garner told Billboard that the priorities for 2009 were finding the right shows and then addressing what he called an industrywide issue of 40% of ticket inventory going unsold.

'There is a new wave, a next generation of bands, that is really starting to sell hard tickets.'
—ROB LIGHT, CREATIVE ARTISTS AGENCY

"Going into the year we sat down and said, 'We need to book a good lineup,' " Garner said. "Once we knew we had a good lineup, then we knew the challenge in this economy would be how to sell a lot of a lot of tickets, how to motivate fans."

At one point, Garner told Billboard that the promotions had saved fans $10 million and boosted incremental attendance by some 600,000 tickets. The industry reception was mixed. Some praised the aggressive discounting strategy for boosting attendance and drawing attention to concerts, while others used terms like "fire sale" and "blue light specials."

Some see good and bad points to the price promotions. "There are pros and cons that came out of last summer, and if we pick the best of it, it can be helpful, and we've got to get rid of the worst of it," Light says. "The real key is to reward the fan who is [buying] early, who is proactive and truly a fan."

AEG Live, a distant second to Live Nation, reported $888 million from 2,531 shows, with 12.8 million attendance, compared with $1 billion in gross, 14.5 million in attendance and 2,324 shows last year. That's a 12% decrease in gross and a 9% increase in shows.

"Since AEG Live is privately held, we do not engage in a market-share competition or measurement of success," Phillips says. "Our only consideration is our net profit, or EBITDA [earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization], calculation."

For AEG, tours like Spears, Turner and "American Idol" drew fans, as did festivals like Coachella, Stagecoach and Jazzfest. But much of the attention on AEG Live in 2009 centered on the death of Michael Jackson and the cancellation of what would have been an AEG-promoted 50-show run at London's O2 Arena.

Even with the dip in numbers reported, "2009 was our touring units' most profitable year in our 10-year history," Phillips says. "It was clearly a case of less being more. Hopefully, 2010 will be as good or better. AEG Live, obviously, has great expectations for Bon Jovi, Taylor Swift and the Black Eyed Peas, amongst others, next year. However, it is hard to predict whether we can surpass the numbers tabulated in 2009."

Major indies also reported increases in gross box-office reports, including Chicago's Jam Productions ($78 million in 2009, $53 million in 2008) and Austin's C3 Presents ($60 million in 2009, $50 million last year). Also strong were international independents like Time 4 Fun in Sao Paulo, Brazil ($151 million in gross); MCD in Dublin ($122 million); and Australia's Michael Coppel Presents ($103 million).

Light says he's encouraged by the new emerging talent and a bevy of healthy industry trends. "What I am excited about on the positive sid the big packages, the great shows c tinue to do great. The event sh continue to do great. Comed stronger than ever," he says. "/ there is a new wave, a next genera of bands, that is really starting to hard tickets."

For his part, WMEE's Grossli says that his instincts tell him 2 will be similar to this year for the c cert business. "Unemployment is kind of creeping up; maybe we'll the bottom at the end of this year early next year," he says. "When employment starts to go down, t when you'll see a tremendous rebo in general activity."

Overall, 2009 may be remembe for what didn't happen: disaster.

"I've been through a lot of re sions in my career, and frankly r of them had any impact on our b ness," Grosslight says. "The old a that the entertainment busine recession-proof had always prov be true. But we hadn't seen anyt of this magnitude. Given the ex ence of this year, I don't think there is a reason not to be optim about next year. The fear seems out of people's vernacular."

STICKY & SWEET— AND SOLD OUT

After Global Sweep, Madonna Is The Top Solo Touring Artist In Chart History By Ray Waddell

It was sticky and sweet, wildly ambitious and massively successful. ¶ Madonna's 2008-09 Sticky & Sweet tour—her fourth under the direction of Live Nation's Global Touring division and her first under a 10-year multirights deal with Live Nation—broke records around the globe. ¶ But long before the tour ever struck its first pose on Aug. 23, 2008, in Cardiff, Wales, work had begun to bring Madonna's touring dreams to fruition. ¶ When Madonna's camp announced the artist's plans for the global Sticky & Sweet tour in May 2008, much of the focus was on either the artist's new deal with Live Nation or skepticism about the large number of stadiums she would play.

from your Warner Bros. Records Family Worldwide from >>p57 Madonna's manager, Guy Oseary, says the touring strategy "just felt like the right thing to do. Thankfully, it all worked out. It was a success. It was fun. It was rewarding. The numbers don't lie, as they say."

Ah, the numbers. Some $408 million in ticket gross, 3.5 million in attendance and 85 shows later, Madonna now owns the record for the top-grossing tour ever by a solo artist, according to Billboard Boxscore. Sticky & Sweet also is the second-highest-grossing tour of all time after the Rolling Stones' Bigger Bang run in 2005-07 (although U2's 360° tour is closing in).

Who could doubt the power of Madonna now?

"There is absolutely no question that the stature and positioning and iconic view of Madonna hasn't diminished whatsoever over the 25 years of her career," says Arthur Fogel, chairman of Live Nation Global Touring and producer of Madonna's last four tours. "In fact, it's quite the opposite. She's bigger now than she's ever been. That's an amazing position to be in, and a credit to her and her career."

The original tour included about 55 shows, and the plan was to do Europe outdoors, a combination of stadiums and arenas in North America, then Mexico and South America outdoors. Right off the bat, the large number of outdoor stadiums booked around the world attracted attention. Surely Madonna's stature as one of the most popular artists in the world was secure, but stadiums represented a huge risk in terms of production and image.

"It was a bit ambitious, but it was something I believed in and pushed for," Fogel says. "On the tour before this we had done some outdoor shows in Europe mixed in, and I think she really enjoyed playing outdoors to the big crowds. So as long as the belief was there that we would do the business, certainly the interest was there for her to play more outdoors."

The routing was, of course, strategic, particularly in booking North American stadiums. "Certainly there were markets where she either had never been or hadn't been in years," Fogel says. "For example, in her career she had never played Vancouver. I really felt we could go in there the first time in and play a stadium, 25 years into an amazing career. We ended up doing 53,000 people."

'It was a success. It was fun. It was rewarding. The numbers don't lie, as they say.'
—GUY OSEARY, MADONNA'S MANAGER

In the end, Madonna only booked five North American stadium shows—Vancouver, Houston, Miami, San Diego and Los Angeles—but they attracted the lion's share of attention when the tour was rolled out.

"There were the skeptics," Fogel says, "and they clearly don't think these things through and don't really understand them. I guess that's why they sit on the sidelines and armchair quarterback and I make the decisions, or at least provide the counsel to the artist and the manager."

The decision to extend the tour with 27 more international shows, mostly in stadiums, in 2009 was "really simple," according to Fogel. "There were a lot of places that we could play, most of which she had never played before," he says. "I think she was so enjoying this show and this group of performers that it came together pretty easily."

Such discussions have come up on past tours, Fogel says, "but for whatever reason it just never came to pass. On this one it came up again, and I could just tell there was a real interest there in keeping it going, even though there was a long break between the end of South America and the start of Europe this year. And almost three-quarters of the dates were at places she'd never played before."

Breaking new ground is a key takeaway from Sticky & Sweet.

"People get to see one aspect of it, they get the report that says, '$408 million, second-highest-grossing tour of all time,' but they don't see the reality, which is the best part," Oseary says. "We went to places we don't normally go, we connected with people we don't normally connect with, we saw countries we don't normally get to see and performed in amazing places. That experience is priceless. Will we ever get to see this in the same way? No. It was a moment in time."

In retrospect, the overall Sticky & Sweet strategy was dead on. "I look back on it, and I can't think of anything that was a huge mistake," Fogel says. The same could be said for the end result on all four tours Live Nation and Fogel have produced for Madonna. She is the third-highest-grossing artist of the past decade, with more than $800 million in grosses and 6.4 million in attendance to 248 shows. No solo artist has achieved better touring success this decade than Madonna.

"All the decisions and big-picture strategy played out perfectly," Fogel says. "The first tour we did with her was in 2001, so really in nine years we've done four tours, which is pretty amazing in and of itself. But when you think about it, in the previous 13 years, she only did two tours, 1993 and around '87 or '89. Two tours in 13 or 14 years, and then four in eight. It all played out very nicely to deliver these results."

The success of Sticky & Sweet—and indeed, Madonna's touring momentum in general—"ultimately is a great credit to her," Fogel says, and he cites other contributing factors, including Madonna's development as a live performer.

"She was always a great performer, but over the last 10 years or so she's really come into her own in terms of the type of continued on >>p62 from >>p60 productions and performance level that's being delivered," Fogel says. "I think that's obvious to anybody who's seen her perform over the last four tours."

Another factor is the maturation of the global touring marketplace, the development of new live entertainment markets and that an artist of Madonna's stature is playing those territories. "When you look at the tour this past summer, it's interesting that Bulgaria, Romania, Hungary, Estonia and on and on have become the solid markets that they are," Fogel says. "That provides great satisfaction for me and I certainly think that it does for her, in terms of the many fans in those territories getting the opportunity after all these years to experience her show."

For all its media attention, Live Nation's long-term deal with Madonna didn't have a huge impact on Sticky & Sweet, Fogel says, as Global Touring has always thought long term when it comes to Madonna. "One of the important aspects to what I do is thinking ahead," he says. "It's about the tour at the moment and what's best, but also I never want to stop thinking about what the next tour will be and the ongoing development of an artist on a global basis. What you do this time impacts next time."

So what about next time? "It's always an interesting exercise, thinking about next time, whenever that might be, what should be done, how to come at it in terms of territories, venues, etc.," Fogel muses. "There are some obvious things that jump out as to what can be next time."

Such as? Fogel reels it off. "She hasn't played Australia, New Zealand for many, many years. We didn't play Japan or any of Southeast Asia on this tour. And those are certainly territories that I feel we could do next time and probably will. Beyond that, it's a question of what kind of time we have and what kind of show she's thinking about. When you think about where she has positioned herself as a touring act on a global basis, there are so many opportunities still to go out and do exciting things."

Regarding the deal with Live Nation, Oseary says, "We've always had an amazing relationship with Live Nation, which was one of the reasons we made the deal. We never feel pressured to do anything. They are not just people we work with or our partners on the records—they are our friends. It doesn't feel like 'us and them,' it just feels like 'us,' and where it makes sense, we do things. The relationship is so good they can call me tomorrow and say they want to do anything, and we're open to doing it, whether they don't have the rights or they do have the rights."

Oseary agrees with Fogel that the long-term deal didn't have a direct impact on Sticky & Sweet, and all the synergies in merchandising, branding, licensing and recording are "the future, the next level. That's when we start incorporating our albums into things. We have yet to scratch the surface on what the future holds. Madonna is an artist that wants to reach the most people she can and do it in very creative ways, and we're all ears. On that, we're sitting at the table with Live Nation together and we're listening."

As for the next step, "I really have no idea. We got off tour not so long ago, we're taking a breath, then we're going to start meeting with people and hearing ideas," Oseary says. "The only thing Madonna and I have asked for is to not be limited—meaning, I want to hear everything and anything. We're open to anything. The goal is to reach as many people as possible—that's the prerequisite. We're aiming high." ••••

THE LONG GOODBYE

Warner Bros. Relationship With Madonna Endures By Ray Waddell

When news came in fall 2007 that Madonna would leave her only label home at Warner Bros. Records for a multirights deal with Live Nation reportedly worth $120 million, it heralded the end of one of the most productive label/artist collaborations ever.

Warner Bros. Records chairman/CEO Tom Whalley was a junior A&R person at Warner when Madonna joined the WB family, and he played what he calls a "minor role" in her signing to Seymour Stein's Sire imprint in 1983. Whalley recalls the first time he was around her at an industry party.

"To see her drive to meet people, to know who people were, how these people were going to mean something to her and her career, you just knew that there was nothing that was going to get in her way," Whalley says. "She was going to take all of her natural talent and combine that with a drive to succeed, and that combination was going to work for her in a big way. The initial impression: 'Wow, this is a force.' "

Video presence: Warner Bros. plans a DVD release next year of performances from MADONNA'S Sticky & Sweet tour.

The Madonna/Warner partnership was more than productive, yielding 11 studio albums, six compilations, three soundtracks, two live sets and three remix releases—as well as more than 50 Billboard Hot 100 hits and a record-setting 40 No. 1 hits on the Hot Dance Club Play chart.

Madonna's album sales total 75 million in the United States and 200 million abroad, according to Warner, with 26.5 million U.S. albums sold in the Nielsen SoundScan era.

Helping drive the hits in the early days was the growth of MTV and music videos as an art form.

"Madonna was at the forefront of the explosion of music and video," Whalley says. "She was a natural at it. This was also the beginnings of artists finding other ways to express themselves, to challenge the marketplace, challenge the public who listened to or bought music. She was at the forefront of this."

Whalley calls Madonna "the quintessential Warner Bros." artist. "She had a really strong vision, she had an incredibly strong point of view about what she wanted to say," he says. "In my view, it was really the perfect marriage of a record company's philosophy and cult meeting up with an artist's philo phy and culture. It created so thing that was incredibly dynan

Whalley notes that the par with Madonna is bittersweet.

How Madonna's Team Took Her Vision On The Road

By Ray Waddell

MADONNA'S VISION FOR HER global Sticky & Sweet tour came to Live Nation in April 2008, four months before the two-year global run opened in Cardiff, Wales.

"The concept always starts with Madonna and Jamie King, her longtime show designer," says Tres Thomas, senior VP of operations for Live Nation Global Touring.

Madonna's manager, Guy Oseary, describes the working relationship of the superstar and her creative collaborator.

"Jamie King and Madonna get in a room, they brainstorm, they go through songs, that's where it begins," Oseary says. "Then they bring in the creative collaborators to work on different videos and work with different designers and her stylist Arianne [Phillips] to come up with different looks for each phase of the show. It's very much like a musical, more so than just a rock'n'roll performance. From beginning to end, there are a lot of theatrics and strong visual aspects. I'm lucky, I get to see every show, and every show I see something different.

"They come up with concepts for the show, which is always heavy on dance and ideas that Madonna wants to try that are usually either product- or tour-specific," Thomas continues. "That concept is given over to [director of production] Chris Lamb, and Chris' task is to make those dreams come into something toward reality that we can put on the road and do three-and-a-half shows a week on average."

Madonna always sets out to break new ground in terms of production and presentation, Thomas says. "To get the music and dance and video, all of the elements that are her trademarks, into her shows, it takes a while to put that into physical manifestation," he says. "The concept of how to get the physicality of that into an ongoing show is always a challenge for Chris, Mac Mosier the lighting director and all the other members of the creative team."

Part of the challenge is to not only create a new and exciting show, but to break it down and set it up in markets all over the world. And every audience, no matter where they are, gets the complete Madonna experience. "There is no 'B' show. Every market gets the full-on Madonna production," Thomas says. "It's a challenge to produce a show that's consistent in every market around the world."

As the producer of Madonna's tours, Live Nation's scope of responsibility extends beyond routing the tour, cutting the building deals and promoting the shows.

"When it's a produced tour, we have preferred vendors she's worked with throughout the years. We try to just let the sound, light and video company that best represents, with their state-of-the-art equipment, the show that was designed by Madonna and Jamie King," Thomas says. "That all falls into our realm, the womb to the tomb, and it's really a partnership."

Most of the production team members are veterans of several Madonna tours. "Everyone rises to the challenge and wants to come back," Thomas says. "If you asked them that question toward the end of the tour, they'd wonder why they did it. She demands a lot, but there's a lot of consistency in the top players around her touring business because she is the premier female artist in the world. There are a lot of good people that worked on this tour and a lot of good people have given their all to make it as successful as it has been, and she recognizes that."

Live Nation's massive global footprint, with a local presence in virtually every market Madonna plays, creates a system that allows local support for each show. "It's really unique in as much as the platform for Live Nation is as such that Global Touring allows us to concentrate on touring prod tion and the elements of putting show on sale, renting the venues, e while our local partners coordin marketing and handle all the local gistics," Thomas says. "I wouldn't v ture to say what the best caterer is Washington, D.C.; I'd leave tha Mike Burgess in our Live Nation Wa ington office. Frankly, it's a pretty sea less operation these days."

Sticky & Sweet, particularly in No America, shifted flawlessly from a nas to stadiums. The total touring s for the stadium shows, not count local labor and including bus and tr drivers, topped out at about 170, w 55 trucks of production.

"We've all gotten good at this, people that have been in the stadi business a long time. That goes fr promoters, riggers, sound crew truck drivers," Thomas says. "I h to say it takes a little while to get i a rhythm, but once you get int rhythm it goes pretty flawlessl when you start getting the load-o down to six hours of production stead of eight and your load-ins [a 18 hours instead of 22."

The professionalism of the N donna touring teams starts with artist. "It sounds a bit biased, b have to say she is a consumm professional; she shows up for ev rehearsal," Thomas says. "The no such thing as skipping sou check. Every little thing she trie make better from show to show. cause of that level of concentrat she gives to her art and perfo ance, it causes all of the band, c and staff to keep that level also. result is a great show, a professi ally run show and a profession produced show."

Madonna's long-term multiri deal with Live Nation has little im on the nuts and bolts of running tour, according to Thomas. "It business as usual, as far as touri concerned," he says. "The other ments on the broader concept o long-term deal are other divisi and there is a lot of interaction wi those revenue streams and ma opportunities, but for us it's a and we do what we always do."

HOW EPIX PICKED MADONNA

New Channel Launched With Sticky & Sweet Show

Before the new multiplatform movie channel EPIX premiered in late October, executives at the channel wanted to launch it with an iconic event that would "set the bar for what we believe our brand should be," EPIX president/CEO Mark Greenberg says.

One of the first musical artists that naturally came to mind was Madonna, then in the midst of her global Sticky & Sweet tour.

"We feel that Madonna was a great way [to launch] because she cuts across so many different generations," Greenberg says. "There aren't many artists who do that."

EPIX—a joint venture among Paramount Pictures, MGM and Lionsgate—offers premier and classic movie and entertainment events on cable TV, the Internet and mobile phones.

EPIX worked with Live Nation and Madonna's management team to finalize the deal, and the result was a two-hour Madonna concert, culled from performances at Buenos Aires' River Plate Stadium, that premiered on EPIX Oct. 30. The event will play on EPIX's cable channel multiple times and is also available through its on-demand feature or online at EPIXhd.com.

"It's a great opportunity for us to be able to allow [Madonna] an other artists to reach their audienc from our platform, whether it through TV or on-demand or on o broadband site," Greenberg say noting that EPIX plans to featu other concerts in the coming yea

Greenberg declined to disclos specific financial details of th Madonna deal but says that EP "paid her appropriately for a M donna concert." He adds that th network is exploring the possib ity of working with Madonna on f ture projects. —Mitchell Pete

SHAKING IT UP

R&B/Hip-Hop Charts Resound With Change By Gail Mitchell

YOU JUST NEED three words to sum up R&B/hip-hop in 2009: What a year. While 2008's major year-end kudos were shared by Lil Wayne, Chris Brown and Alicia Keys, this year is dramatically different.

On several levels, these last 12 months constitute one of the most fortune-changing years in recent memory. Reviewing Billboard's year-end R&B/hip-hop and rap charts, you'll see several patterns.

Yes, it was the year of Beyoncé and Jay-Z. But it was also the year of the major comeback (Whitney Houston, Eminem, Maxwell), the year of the R&B veteran (Charlie Wilson, Ginuwine), the year of the newcomer (Drake, Keri Hilson) and the year of the assist (Jamie Foxx with T-Pain, Mario with Gucci Mane and Sean Garrett, Hilson with Lil Wayne).

Beyond the charts, others will remember 2009 as the year of the fall from grace (Brown, Kanye West). And, sadly, it was also the year of the untimely loss (Michael Jackson).

Leading the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart this year is Beyoncé with "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce" (Music World/Columbia/Sony Music). Billboard's 2009 Woman of the Year notches arguably the best year yet of her career, as she also sashays to the head of the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Album Artists tally on the hit-filled heels of her third solo album. The singer places three singles on the year-end Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart: "Single Ladies (Put a Ring on It)" at No. 6, "Ego" at No. 14 and "Diva" at No. 22.

Among Beyoncé's additional "Fierce" year-end accolades are No. 1 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Artists-Female recap, No. 1 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Album Artists tally and No. 2 on the Top Billboard 200 Albums recap, just behind Taylor Swift.

Meanwhile, Jay-Z, who ranks at No. 8 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Artists chart, proves he's still got the chops on "The Blueprint 3" (Roc Nation). The album's sales have been fueled by the hits "Run This Town" featuring Rihanna and West and current crossover anthem "Empire State of Mind" featuring Keys. "Blueprint" finishes the year at No. 12 on the year-end Billboard 200 tally.

Rounding out the top 10 after Beyoncé on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Artists chart—which combines album sales data from the Billboard 200 and airplay data from the Billboard Hot 100—are Foxx, West, Ne-Yo, Maxwell, Drake, Keyshia Cole, T.I. and the-Dream.

Maxwell, together with Houston and Eminem, comprise 2009's triumvirate of major R&B/hip-hop comebacks. All three land in the top 15 of this year's Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums tally: Maxwell at No. 6 with "BLACKsummers'night" (Columbia/Sony Music), Eminem at No. 7 with "Relapse" (Web/Shady/Aftermath/Interscope/IGA) and Houston at No. 9 with "I Look to You" (Arista/RMG).

Two R&B veterans make a strong showing on the year-end recaps: Charlie Wilson, former frontman of the '80s group the Gap Band, and Ginuwine, who first hit the R&B charts in 1996 with "Pony." Wilson, who perches atop the Hot Adult R&B Songs year-end chart with "There Goes My Baby," also racked up a second song on that list at No. 14, "Can't Live Without You." That earns Wilson No. 1 kudos on the Hot Adult R&B Artists tally and No. 22 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums recap for "Uncle Charlie" (P Music/Jive/JLG). Ginuwine, meanwhile, sang his way to No. 10 on the Hot Adult R&B Songs recap with "Last Chance." In both cases, these R&B stalwarts, along with Maxwell, showed that old school can still be cool school.

Thanks to his pairing with T-Pain on the ubiquitous crossover hit "Blame It," Foxx's third studio album, "Intuition" (J/RMG), was propelled to No. 2 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart. As a result, Foxx also scores at No. 1 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Artists-Male recap and Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. Also notching hits through memorable assists this year were Mario with "Break Up" featuring Mane and Garrett, which holds down No. 3 on the Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs recap, and Hilson with L Wayne on "Turnin' Me On," whi lands at No. 7 on that same chart.

Speaking of Hilson, the singe songwriter is one of the top ne artists to emerge this year on t R&B/hip-hop front. In addition her duet with Lil Wayne, she ran at No. 11 on the year-end Hot R& Hip-Hop Songs chart with "Kno You Down" featuring West and N Yo. Her debut album, the prophe "In a Perfect World . . ." (Mosle Zone4/Interscope), ends up at N 15 on the Top R&B/Hip-Hop A bums tally.

By far, the performer generati the most buzz this year is You Money artist Drake, whose mixta spun off the major hit "Best I Ev Had" as well as a signing fren that ultimately landed him at U versal Motown. As a result, t artist/actor wraps 2009 at the t of both Hot Rap Songs and T New R&B/Hip-Hop Artists, wh building anticipation for his 20 debut album.

PERSTAR TAYLOR SWIFT, le sweeping the year-end pop rts, is once again country's queen. he finishes 2009 the same way ended 2008: at No. 1 on the year- Top Country Artists recap. Swift, also ranks atop the Top Country sts-Female chart from combined m sales and singles airplay for second straight year, is No. 1 on Top Country Album Artists tally. November 2008 release, "Fear- " (Big Machine), is the No. 1 title his year's Top Country Albums t, while her self-titled 2006 debut o. 6 on that list.

wift is No. 5 on the Hot Country gs Artists recap, and she's the top ale on that chart. She placed two gs, "You Belong With Me" and ite Horse," on the Hot Country gs tally. She's also No. 1 on the year-end recaps of Hot Country Songwriters and Hot 100 Songwriters.

All in all, an impressive run for someone who just turned 20.

Rascal Flatts comes in at No. 1 on the Top Country Artists-Duo/Group recap, a year-end chart it previously lead in 2007. The group's strong year found it finishing at No. 2 on the Top Country Artists and Top Country Album Artists recaps, behind Swift. The trio of Gary LeVox, Joe Don Rooney and Jay DeMarcus placed two Lyric Street albums in the upper echelon of the Top Country Albums list: "Unstoppable" finishes at No. 4, and "Greatest Hits Volume I" lands at No. 11.

The group is second to only Keith Urban on the Hot Country Songs Artist recap. It places two songs, "Summer Nights" (No. 20) and "Here Comes Goodbye" (No. 34), on the Hot Country Songs year-end tally.

Lady Antebellum, the hot trio comprising Hillary Scott, Charles Kelley and Dave Haywood, dominates the Hot Country Songs recap, placing "I Run to You" at No. 1 for the year. The group's most recent hit, "Need You Now," also lands in the top 50 for the year (No. 48). Its self-titled Capitol Nashville debut finishes the year at No. 9 on the Top Country Albums recap, and the trio is among the top five in the Top Country Artists-Duo/Group category.

It was also a good year for the Zac Brown Band, which places "The Foundation" (Roar/Bigger Picture/Home Grown/Atlantic/AG) at No. 2 on the Top Country Albums recap. The Georgia group finished at No. 3 on Top Country Album Artists behind Swift and Rascal Flatts, and its single "Whatever It Is" is the No. 2 Hot Country Songs title for the year. The group takes the No. 4 slot on the Hot Country Songs Artists recap.

Lady Antebellum and the Zac Brown Band aren't the only relative newcomers occupying the upper region of the Hot Country Songs tally. Randy Houser's "Boots On" (Universal South) and Darius Rucker's "It Won't Be Like This for Long" (Capitol Nashville) finish at Nos. 3 and 4, respectively. (Rucker also placed "Alright" at No. 8, making him the only artist with two rankings in the top 10.) Country's "Mr. Consistency," George Strait, places "River of Love" (MCA Nashville) at No. 5.

Thanks to strong sales and airplay, Keith Urban is No. 1 on the Top Country Artists-Male recap, finishing ahead of Capitol Nashville labelmates Rucker at No. 2 and Dierks Bentley at No. 8. Urban also rules the Hot Country Songs Artists tally, thanks to three titles on the Hot Country Songs chart: "Sweet Thing" (No. 9), "Only You Can Love Me This Way" (No. 19) and "Kiss a Girl" (No. 25) all rank within the top 25 for the year.

Urban's "Defying Gravity" (Capitol Nashville) is the No. 10 title on the Top Country Albums chart for 2009, and the Australian also finishes the year at No. 10 on the Top Country Album Artists recap.

Jennifer Nettles and Kristian Bush, aka Sugarland, rank at No. 5 on the Top Country Artists tally, based on airplay and sales. The duo turned in another solid performance in 2009. Its release "Love on the Inside" (Mercury/Universal Music Group Nashville) is No. 5 on the Top Country Albums chart. The pair ranks at No. 4 on the Top Country Album Artists chart and at No. 3 on the recap for Top Country Artists-Duo/Group.

The Top New Country Artists crown belongs to Arkansas native Justin Moore, whose breakthrough hit, "Small Town USA" (Valory), finished the year at No. 11 on the Hot Country Songs recap. His self-titled debut squeezed in at No. 48 on the Top Country Albums tally.

Meanwhile, a quartet (Gloriana), a trio (Love and Theft), a solo male artist (David Nail) and a duo (Joey + Rory) round out the top five positions on the Top New Country Artists tally.

Capitol Nashville is the Top Country Imprint for the second straight year thanks to the sales and airplay success of Lady Antebellum, Rucker, Urban, Bentley and Trace Adkins. Big Machine, which is home to Swift, clocks in at No. 2 in the category. When it comes to airplay, no one tops Capitol Nashville, which repeats at No. 1 on Hot Country Songs Imprints and overtakes Arista Nashville on the Hot Country Songs Labels chart.

Strictly on the sales side, Sony Music Nashville—home to top sellers Carrie Underwood, Kenny Chesney, Brad Paisley, Alan Jackson and Miranda Lambert, among others—reigns on Top Country Album Labels, taking the crown from last year's winner, Universal Music Group Nashville.

Swift's sales dominance helped propel Big Machine to the peak of the Top Country Album Imprints chart; it's the first win in the category for the 5-year-old label. Capitol Nashville places second. Meanwhile, Universal is once again No. 1 on the Top Country Album Distributors recap.

For the second straight year, Frank Rogers, who works with Paisley and Rucker, is No. 1 on the Hot Country Producers recap. Dann Huff (Rascal Flatts, Keith Urban) finishes at No. 2 in the category.

While Swift tops the Hot Country Songwriters tally, Jackson, Brett James, Chris DuBois, Wyatt Durrette and Zac Brown round out the top five. (Co-writers Durrette and Brown share fifth place.) ••••

SALES OF LATIN MUSIC MAY HAVE plummeted in the past year, but a new generation of Latin music buyers knows what it likes to hear, buy and see. With Bronx-based bachata act Aventura leading the way, young, urban-leaning acts dominate the year-end Latin charts, with releases from five such acts among the top 10 best-selling Latin albums of the year.

Aventura's success was a rare example of win-win-win. The group started the year on a high note with five sold-out shows at the Coliseo de Puerto Rico José Miguel Agrelot, then went on to release "The Last" (Premium Latin/Sony Music Latin), which is now No. 1 on the year-end Top Latin Albums recap. Aventura is also No. 1 on the Top Latin Album Artists tally. Also at the top is the reggaetón duo Wisin & Yandel, whose album "La Revolucion" (Machete/UMLE) is No. 2 on the Top Latin Albums chart. The pair come in at No. 3 on the Top Latin Album Artists chart, behind veteran Vicente Fernández at No 2.

Looking at radio airplay, Aventura's "Por Un Segundo" lands at No. 3 on the Hot Latin Songs recap, behind mega-hit "El Amor" by Tito "El Bambino," another young, urban artist. At No. 1 is "Te Presumo" by Banda El Recodo, a veteran regional Mexican act. The group's chart-topping achievement on the Hot Latin Songs tally is a rarity for a regional Mexican track.

Independent Latin labels this year showed their clout, including Premium (Aventura's longtime label), Siente (Tito El Bambino's label), Balboa (home to Joan Sebastian) and upstarts like Top Spot (Luis Enrique's label). But the dominant force remains Universal Music Latin Entertainment, which has become the biggest, most powerful Latin label in the market.

Universal is No. 1 on the Top Latin Albums Distributor recap, at a time when it's increasingly distributing Universal-owned product only, as opposed to the many indie labels it had under its umbrella in the past. UMLE is also No. 1 on the Top Latin Album Labels chart, with a staggering 207 charting titles compared with 73 for runner-up Sony Music Latin. Never before in Billboard's year-end charts has a single label so fully dominated the marketplace.

Universal's clout was expected, given its size following its acquisition of Univision Music Group last year. But Universal's fully owned labels and imprints have also led the charge on every single year-end chart, a testament to UMLE's objective of focusing labels by genre.

At No. 1 on the Hot Latin Pop Songs Labels recap is Universal Music Latino, UMLE's pop label, with 25 charting titles. Among the label's most consistent hitmakers is Luis Fonsi, who, with three charting tracks, ranks at No. 1 on the Hot Latin Pop Songs Artists recap. Fonsi's "Palabras del Silencio" (Universal Music Latino), released last year, has continued to sell unabated. It ends the year at No. 3 on the Top Latin Albums chart, behind only Aventura's "The Last" and Wisin & Yandel's "La Revolucion."

UMLE's regional Mexican labels, Disa and Fonovisa, dominated the imprint charts. Fonovisa is No. 1 on the Top Latin Album Imprints recap with Disa at No. 2. Conversely, Disa is No. 1 on the Hot Latin Songs Imprints chart, with Fonovisa at No. 2. Fonovisa is home to Banda El Recodo and El Trono de Mexico. On high: CASTING CROWNS ruled the Christian charts this year.

CHRISTIAN & GOSPEL

REIGN ON

Casting Crowns Leads Christian Recaps For Third Year By Deborah Evans Price

Casting Crowns continued to dominate the Christian music community in 2009, placing No. 1 on the Top Christian Album Artists list for the third consecutive year. The band's new studio album, "Until the Whole World Hears" (Beach Street/Reunion), was released Nov. 17, and even though the new product wasn't available until late in the fourth quarter, Casting Crowns still reigned at retail throughout the chart year, based on the continued sales strength of the band's previous releases.

The Georgia-based worship group first burst on the scene with its 2003 self-titled debut, powered by such hits as "If We Are the Body," "Voice of Truth" and "Who Am I." It followed with 2005's "Lifesong" and 2007's "The Altar and the Door," and the act has also released three live projects and a Christmas collection, 2008's "Peace on Earth." The strength of its live show and the band's interactive Web site (lead singer Mark Hall is a witty Twitter enthusiast) help keep Christian consumers engaged and nurture the Casting Crowns phenomenon.

The diversity of music underneath the Christian/gospel umbrella is reflected in the year-end tally, as the highest ranking acts on the Top Christian Album Artists chart includes the soulful sounds of Mary Mary (at No. 2), well-known worship leader Chris Tomlin (No. 3) and hard rock band Red (No. 10).

Rock music earns a substantial place on 2009's year-end lists. In addition to Red, rocker Jeremy Camp earned a slot at No. 7 on Top Christian Album Artists this year. Georgia rock act Third Day, which was inducted into the Georgia Music Hall of Fame in September, is No. 5. Perennial favorites Michael W. Smith and MercyMe rank Nos. 4 and 9, respectively.

Mary Mary is No. 1 on the Top Gospel Album Artists recap. The sisters' stellar year has been fueled by the strength of their latest album, "The Sound" (My Block/Columbia/Sony Music). Once and current king: MICHAEL JACKSON'S catalog dominated 2009.

HOW WE CHART THE YEAR

nnual Billboard Recaps Track Top Artists And tles Of 2009 By Silvio Pietroluongo

LBOARD'S ANNUAL YEAR Music special issue offers a dizzy- array of more than 250 charts in print pages with close to 400 kings available at Billboard.biz, uding deeper lists for some charts uded on these pages.

oining the printed lineup in 2009 airplay rankings for Christian gs, Heritage Rock, Active Rock Triple A as well as sales tallies Comprehensive Albums and egrass Albums.

lso added to the menu are pub- ing, writer and producer recaps Gospel and a top artists ranking Master Ringtones.

hose additions provide chart- oing achievements this year for including Michael Jackson, th Avenue North, Shinedown, dvayne, Snow Patrol, Steve Mar- James L. Moss and T.I.

xclusive to Billboard.biz are a host of charts including Christian AC, Christian CHR, Tastemakers, Hot Videoclips and Top Music Videos.

As before, each of the year-end music tallies in this section represent aggregated numbers for each artist, title and music company from the weekly charts on which they appeared.

Most of those numbers are based on data from Nielsen Entertainment, with sales of physical and digital product compiled by Nielsen SoundScan and radio airplay and digital streams measured by Nielsen BDS. The Master Ringtones category is based on sales tracked by Nielsen RingScan.

The entire Billboard charts department has a hand in compiling the Year in Music lists. At the center of this effort is associate director of charts Raphael George, with charts production manager Michael Cusson and associate production manager Alex Vitoulis each playing key roles. Boxscore chart manager Bob Allen compiles the touring charts. (See "As Turnstiles Spin," page 138.)

The rankings for BDS- and SoundScan-based music charts reflect airplay or sales during the weeks that titles appeared on a relevant chart during the tracking period. This includes activity during unpublished weeks for those lists that print every other week. The 2009 music chart year began with last year's Dec. 6 issue and ended with the one dated Nov. 28, 2009.

Sales or airplay registered before or after a title's chart run aren't considered in these standings. That detail, and the December-November time period, account for some of the differences between these lists and the calendar-year recaps that are compiled independently by either SoundScan or BDS.

Artist, imprint, label and distributor categories for all genres reflect accumulated chart performance for all titles on the pertinent chart.

The umbrella "label" categories refer to the distributing labels and/or promotion labels listed on our weekly charts. If only one label appears on a chart listing, that company counts as both "imprint" and "label" for that title.

Rankings for the following airplay categories are based on accumulated BDS-monitored plays for each week a song appeared on the chart: Mainstream Top 40, Rhythmic, Alternative, Active Rock, Heritage Rock, Triple A, Adult Contemporary, Adult Top 40, Dance, Mainstream R&B, Adult R&B, Gospel and Smooth Jazz.

Similarly, Hot 100 Airplay, Rap, Hot Country Songs, Christian Songs and Hot Latin Songs (and the four related Latin-format airplay charts) are determined by adding up the total number of gross audience impressions, as determined by BDS by cross-referencing the exact time of airplay with Arbitron listener data for each week a track charted.

The Billboard Hot 100 and Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs categories reflect accumulated radio and sales points, based specifically on BDS and Nielsen SoundScan, respectively. For the Hot 100, points from streamed music on AOL and Yahoo also shape the standings.

For the "top" country and R&B/hip-hop categories that combine data from album charts and singles charts, formulas have been weighted so that the sales units tallied on the Billboard 200, Top Country Albums and Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, respectively, have parity with the specific chart points that construct each week's Hot 100, Hot Country Songs and Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs.

The Dance Club Play rankings are based on an inverse point system, with titles collecting points based on rank for each week they were on the chart.

The publishing categories reflect accumulated points for all charted songs on the applicable weekly charts. If a song is held by more than one publisher, points are divided equally among those companies.

In the Publishing Corporation category, parent companies receive 100% of the points from publishers in which they own at least 50% equity and 25% of the points compiled by publishers that they administer but don't own.

Accompanying label listings on the top artists rankings are limited to the label each artist is signed to. An artist's title count will still include all charting efforts, even those recorded on other labels. ••••

THE YEAR IN MUSIC—ONLINE

Critics—And Readers—Choose Best Albums Of 2009

With more than 250 charts that track the best-selling albums and most-played singles of 2009 and 11 charts that analyze the concert industry, the printed version of Billboard's Year in Music provides an in-depth look at the state of the business.

But Billboard.com and Billboard.biz provide even more extensive year-end coverage.

On Billboard.com, a perennial favorite, the Critic's Choice poll, will present top 10 lists compiled from the votes of Billboard's worldwide team of writers and editors. But this year, we also turned to the real experts—you. Compiling votes submitted online, Billboard.com presents the Readers' 20 Best Albums of the Year.

In addition, the Year in Music coverage on Billboard.com will include versions of our charts of the year's top Hot 100 Songs, Billboard 200 Albums, artists and tours, supplemented with video. You'll also find a gallery of photos of the year.

On Billboard.biz, the Year in Music package will include an extended version of our print stories the 10 Biggest Business Stories of 2009 and exclusive content like the 10 most popular stories on Billboard.biz this year.

Billboard.biz will offer nearly 400 charts, including many exclusive to the Web. Deeper year-end recaps appear on Billboard.biz for categories including Top Billboard 200 Artists, Top Comprehensive Albums, Top Independent Albums and Top Internet Albums.

Deeper charts appear online for such genres as R&B, country, Latin, regional Mexican, tropical, dance, Christian and gospel, classical and jazz. Exclusive to Billboard.com are 18 additional top genre year-end charts.

Full circle: U2 racked up 10 of the top 25 Boxscore engagements of the year, including multiple stadium dates and homecoming shows at Dublin's Croke Park.

BOX TOPS

E TOP 25 BOXSCORES OF 2009 LIST

esn't include the sort of eye-popping ex-ded runs of years past by the likes of Prince Spice Girls or, regrettably, Michael Jack- (which would have extended into 2010 his planned shows at London's O2 Arena ne off).

This year, top engagements are mostly about and Madonna, who between them account 16 of the top 25 Boxscores. Mixed in are fes-ls and such superstars as Bruce Springsteen, y Joel and Elton John, along with a shining king amid a remarkable year for Pink and return of Luis Miguel to the top 25.

he Top 25 Boxscores chart recognizes the grossing single engagements for the chart r, compiled from Boxscore data reported for Billboard issues dated from Dec. 6, 2008, ough Nov. 21, 2009.

Mostly, this year's chart is about U2, with band's 360° tour owning 10 of the top 25 ts, including the top-grossing date of the in Dublin. U2's July 24-27 stop at Croke drew 243,198 to three sellouts, taking in .8 million.

U2 playing at Croke Park in Dublin is a na-al event—in fact, an international event, here were also a significant number of peo-who came from around the world to expe-ce U2 performing in their hometown and ntry," says Arthur Fogel, chairman of Live on Global Touring, producer of the 360° . "These were great shows and a brilliant erience for all."

ther big gigs for U2 on the 2009 leg of its " tour were the Stade de France in Paris ($20.9 million), Wembley Stadium in London ($20.7 million), Camp Nou in Barcelona ($19.8 million) and Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. ($16.1 million).

Live Nation Global Touring also produced Madonna's Sticky & Sweet tour, which chimed in with six top 25 dates, all international and mostly from the 2009 leg: Buenos Aires ($18.3 million); Sao Paulo, Brazil ($15.5 million); Tel Aviv, Israel ($14.7 million); Goteborg, Sweden ($14.6 million); Helsinki ($12.1 million); and Santiago, Chile ($11.4 million).

Fogel says South America in particular was "over-the-top amazing" for Madonna. "She hadn't been there in 17 years, so it was Madonna-mania," he says.

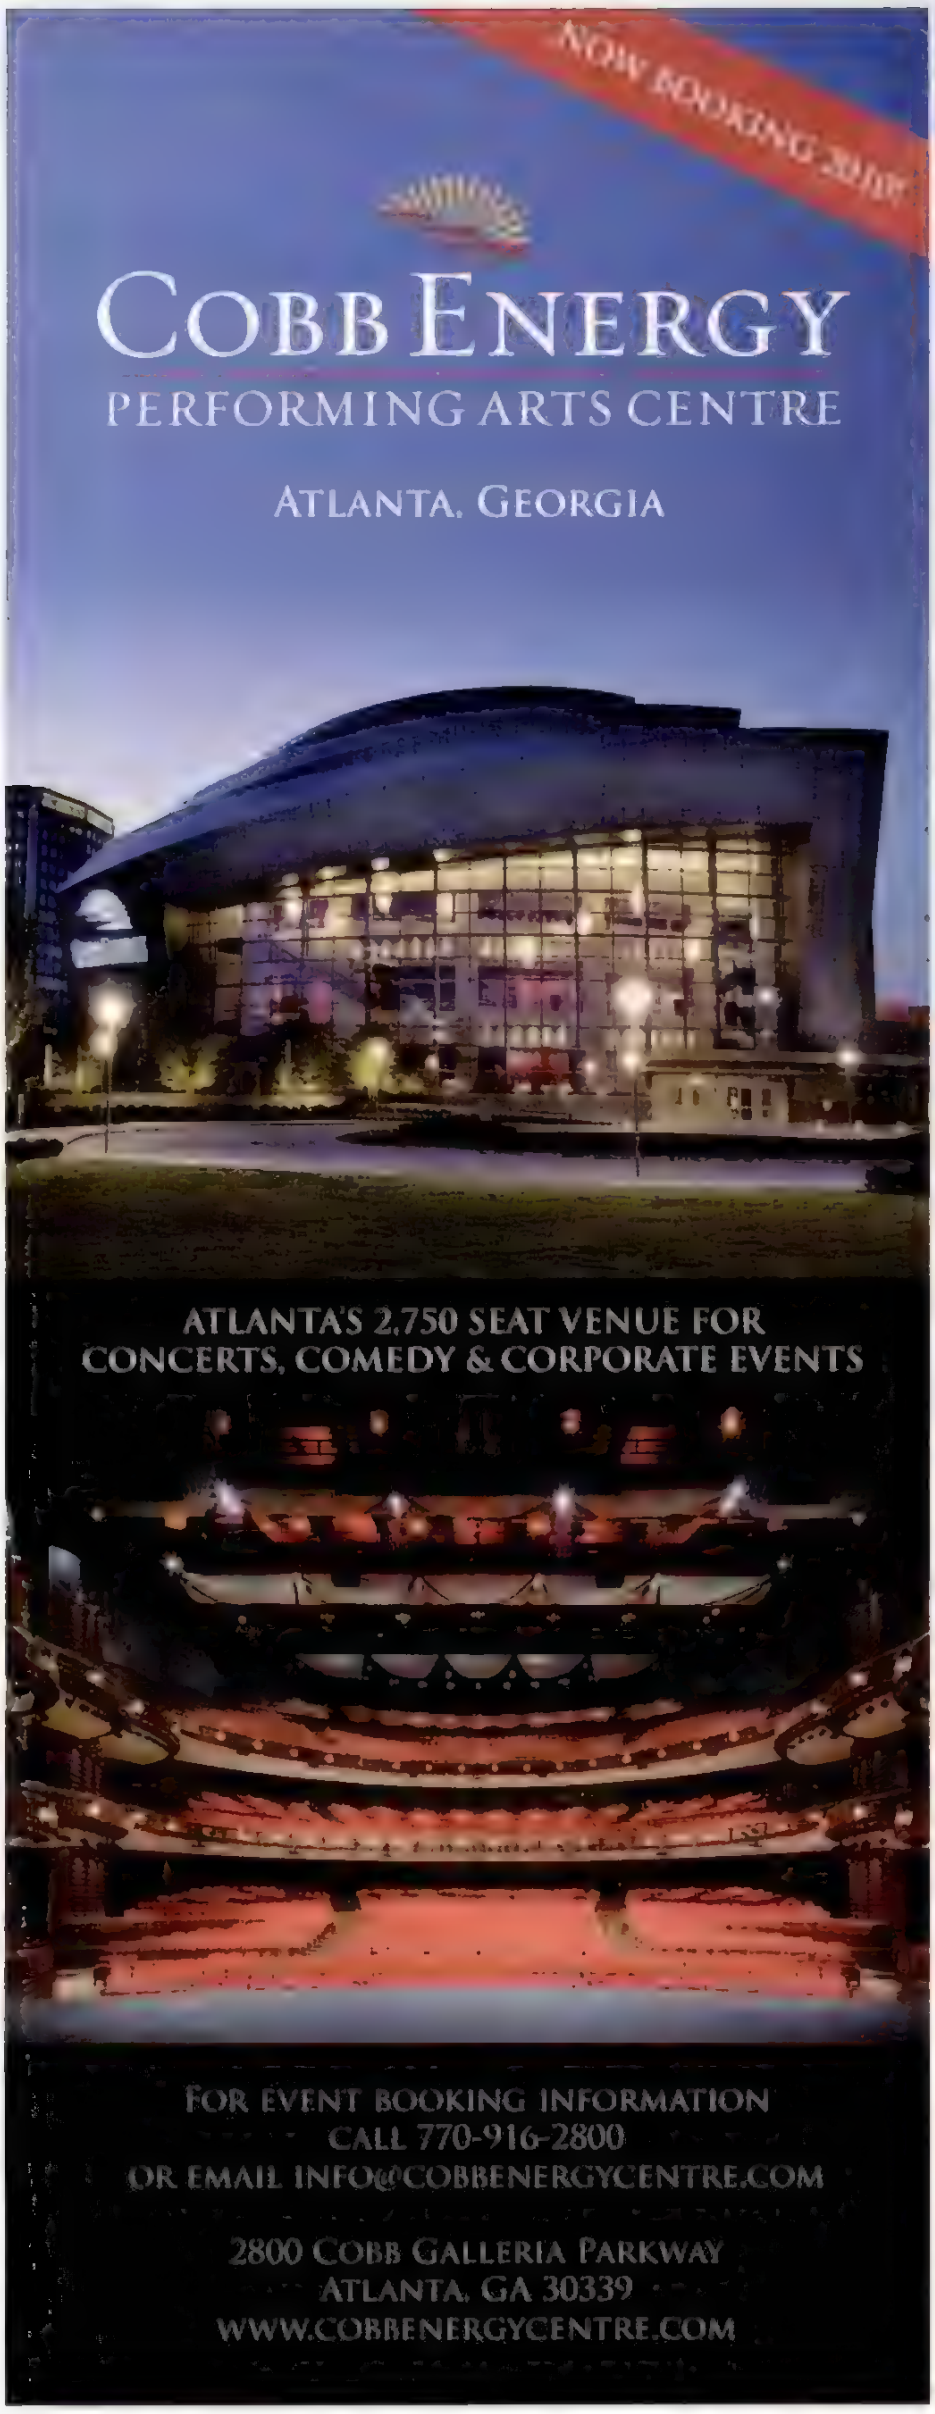
One of the only shows comparable to U2 in Dublin is Bruce in Jersey. Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band bid Giants Stadium a fond farewell to the tune of $22.6 million during five shows that drew 260,668. Springsteen also has the distinction of being the only attraction in the top 25 with a top ticket price of less than $100. In acknowledging the closing of Giants Stadium, Springsteen penned "Wrecking Ball" and debuted it in East Rutherford.

"One of the things that we were most proud of for Giants was the use of our [video] screens," longtime Springsteen manager Jon Landau says. "They were the biggest and clearest ever used and truly made every seat in the house a good one. The performances were all scorchers and a great way to say goodbye to a building that we had played 24 times."

The lengthiest engagement among the highest-grossing Boxscores was Luis Miguel's 25 shows at the Auditorio Nacional in Mexico City that grossed $11.6 million and drew 185,978 in January-March. The shows were promoted by Showtime, and these extended runs have become a biannual event for Miguel in Mexico City.

"Luis Miguel is a remarkable artist with an incredibly loyal audience," says Peter Grosslight, partner/head of music for William Morris Endeavor Entertainment. "He is certainly the leader in the Latin music field in terms of audience and longevity."

Another extended run came from Pink, with 17 shows at Rod Laver Arena in Melbourne, Australia. Those shows, which took place from May through August, were promoted by Michael Coppel Presents and drew 214,956.



The second-highest-grossing engagement of 2009 was the sixth annual Oxegen Fest July 10-12 at Punchestown Racecourse in Naas, Ireland. Produced by independent Dublin promoter Denis Desmond, director of MCD, Oxegen featured Kings of Leon, Snow Patrol, Blur and the Killers as headliners. "We pride ourselves on getting the best lineups. We have a great, appreciative audience, and being named a finalist is a huge credit to all the staff involved in the organization of the festival," Desmond says.

Further down the list are the Goldenvoice/AEG Live-produced Coachella Music & Arts Festival in Indio, Calif. (Paul McCartney, the Cure, My Bloody Valentine), which reported a gross of $15.3 million; C3 Presents' Lollapalooza in Chicago (the Killers, Jane's Addiction, Lou Reed), with a $14 million gross; and the Austin City Limits Music Festival (Kings of Leon, Dave Matthews Band, Pearl Jam), which pulled in $13.5 million. AEG Live's other festivals—Mile High in Denver, Rothbury in Michigan and All Points West in New Jersey—didn't crack the top 25. AEG also co-produces the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival, which drew an estimated 400,000 aggregate attendance but doesn't make its numbers public.

Notably absent from this year's Top Boxscores chart is the Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival in Manchester, Tenn., which has been a fixture among the top grosses since its inception in 2002. Bonnaroo producers A.C. Entertainment and Superfly Presents opted not to report their numbers to Boxscore this year; Billboard estimates the event drew about 80,000 and grossed between $17 million and $18 million, which would have ranked Bonnaroo in the top 10 for all grosses had it reported its numbers.

Live Nation promoted 18 of the top 25 shows of the year. Sixteen of the top 25 were international stops, including seven of the top 10. The cutoff point to crack the top 25 this year was $11.4 million, compared with $9.4 million last year. Twenty-two of the top 25 Boxscores were outdoor events. ••••

The Top Tours Of 2009 Filled Seats, Spanned Generations By Ray Waddell

A YEAR AGO, MANY WERE PREDICTING a downturn—if not disaster—for the touring industry in 2009 based on a gloomy economic forecast, particularly in North America.

A look at the top tours of this year shows that there were plenty of acts that people wanted to see. A dozen of the top 25 tours topped 1 million in attendance, and Madonna and U2 reported 2.1 million and 3 million tickets sold, respectively. The numbers are based on data reported to Billboard Boxscore in the issues dated Dec. 6, 2008, through Nov. 21, 2009.

In terms of gross, five tours exceeded $100 million at the box office, and 18 were at $50 million-plus. Leading everyone is U2 with its groundbreaking 360° tour, which reported a staggering $311.6 million in gross and 3 million in attendance from 44 sellouts. And that's just the first leg. U2's strategy of boosting capacities by staging a first-ever mobile 360-degree configuration clearly paid off. The band averaged more than $7 million in gross and attendance of nearly 70,000 per show, surely the highest averages ever reported to Billboard Boxscore.

Not only is the production fiscally sound, it's also a crowd-pleaser. Word-of-mouth is driving ticket sales well into 2010. "Basically, 80% of next year's tour is on sale and it's unbelievable," says Arthur Fogel, chairman of Live Nation Global Touring, producer of the 360° tour.

With around 50 stadium shows scheduled for next year, compared with 44 in 2009, U2 is on a pace to top $600 million total, which will make it the highest-grossing tour ever, surpassing the Rolling Stones' Bigger Bang tour of 2005-07.

from >>p124 would have to be Pink, who put up superstar numbers on an international scale. Pink's $102.9 million gross and 1.5 million in attendance is enough to rank her fifth among all tours and puts the artist on the map as one of the top earners in the world.

"She is the artist that comes along every decade and shines above all others as a new and unique talent that is truly part of the few real superstars of our business," says Barrie Marshall, whose Marshall Arts promoted many of Pink's shows. "She engages an audience with that special rapport that few can achieve."

Dutch violinist/composer André Rieu staged the sixth top-selling tour of year, playing 112 shows to 834,992 fans for a gross of $95.8 million. "Andre has paved the way for the revival of cross-over classical music that we have seen the last few years," says Roel van Veggel, CFO/ concert tour director of André Rieu Productions.

When Britney Spears teed up her Circus tour with AEG Live, the jury was still out as to whether her comeback would amount to solid ticket sales. Not now. "People didn't know what to expect and it did incredibly well," says Peter Grosslight, William Morris Endeavor Entertainment (WMEE) worldwide head of music. "The show was terrific. It was very entertaining."

Pink's tour puts her on the map as one of the top-grossing live artists in the world.

Coldplay's second year of touring in support of the band's "Viva la Vida or Death and All His Friends" album was strong, grossing more than $84 million with worldwide attendance of 1.2 million. "Coldplay's dedication to touring North America, coupled with an amazing record, certainly factored greatly into their success," says Marty Diamond, the band's agent for North America at Paradigm.

Inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame this year, Metallica further laid claim as the titan of hard rock, putting up huge numbers globally in 2009. "Not only was this year's Metallica tour a treat for longtime fans, it was also great to see so many young faces in the crowd," says Adam Kornfeld, Metallica's longtime North American agent at Artists Group International. "Their fan base is actually still growing."

Jonas Brothers proved that their career is still on the upswing, reporting $73.3 million and more than 1 million in attendance from 62 shows. This is the band's second straight appearance in the top 25. "This year was about Jonas Brothers making the leap of playing the round to deliver as many seats as possib selling 97%-98% of every seat available, kee ing the ticket price under $90 and going to wo every day," says Brad Wavra, VP of Live Natic which promoted the group's tour.

Country superstar Kenny Chesney manag his seventh consecutive year with more thar million in attendance, as his Sun City Carni tour drew 1,034,021 and grossed $71 millic "Kenny just keeps on doing what he does a the fans keep coming," says promoter Lou Messina, president of TMG/AEG Live.

Seventies hitmaker Fleetwood Mac return to the road in 2009 and quietly put up big nu bers, grossing $62.6 million and selling 640,2 tickets to 59 shows.

And it was another year, another top-rank tour from Dave Matthews Band, which in 20 had the added juice of touring on a new reco "Big Whiskey & the GrooGrux King." DM grossed $52 million and drew almost 1 milli in attendance. "This year is another example how they are one the true great care bands," says Ch Hooper, the grou agent at Paradign

Lil Wayne is t only hip-hop artist the top 25, but made a real comm ment to touring 2009 with an am tious slate. " wanted to go out a prove that Wayne was a real headline are artist," said Shawn Gee, producer/busine manager for Lil Wayne's tour, in an earlier B board interview.

The best news here: There's a real infusion new headliners into touring's elite. A shift in trend toward veterans is evident, with two of top 25 tours by acts that broke in the '60s, f from the '70s, five in the '80s and four from '90s. Spears, Coldplay and Brad Paisley (No. on the recap) all released debut albums in 19 but they're really development stories of t decade, along with fellow Top 25 Tour acts Jo Brothers, Il Divo, Lil Wayne, Rascal Flatts, P and Nickelback. For a music business that m feel has struggled in the artist development are this is encouraging news for the future.

"There is a new wave of bands, that is re starting to sell hard tickets," CAA's Light s "There is a great next generation of music c ing and kids want to go. And that is happen while the perennial headliners have not g away, so that's good news for the industry."

O2 Arena Breaks MSG's Eight-Year Streak Atop Large-Venue Chart By Mitchell Peters

World class: London's O2 Arena achieved chart-topping status after hosting Madonna, Beyonce, Paul McCartney and

WITH THE HELP OF A RAFT OF TOP-TIER touring acts—Britney Spears, AC/DC, Pink, Green Day, Taylor Swift, Tina Turner, Metallica, Jonas Brothers, Billy Joel & Elton John, Beyoncé, Kings of Leon and Fleetwood Mac, among others—the international arena business remained stable in 2009.

"Overall, considering all of the economic issues, the arena side of the business—when you consider the touring element and family show business—held its own," says John Page, COO of the facility management firm Global Spectrum, which oversees 88 venues.

Billboard's year-end touring recaps are compiled from Boxscore data collected from Dec. 6, 2008, through Nov. 21, 2009.

In a change from past years, the O2 Arena in London nabs the No. 1 position from New York's Madison Square Garden as top-grossing arena in the world on the Top 10 Venues chart for buildings with a capacity of 15,001 or more. (The Garden had been the highest-grossing arena for eight consecutive years.)

"This year has been a memorable year for the O2," AEG Europe president/CEO David Campbell says. "There were many musical highlights in 2009."

With concerts by world-class acts like John, Turner, Spears, Madonna, Beyoncé, Kings of Leon, the Killers, Miley Cyrus and Paul McCartney, among many others, the O2 reported $138.8 million in grosses and drew 2,433,497 concertgoers to 192 shows. (All Boxscore figures are in U.S. dollars.)

Although the year was filled with many highlights, Campbell expresses sorrow over the death of Michael Jackson, who was scheduled to perform an unprecedented number of concerts at the 23,000-capacity venue. "The film 'This Is It' has shown the world just how great his dates at the O2 were going to be, and it is tragic that they were never to be seen by the public," he says.

Looking ahead to 2010, the O2 already has 60 confirmed dates from such acts as Jeff Beck & Eric Clapton, Whitney Houston, Leona Lewis and Bon Jovi, according to Campbell. As it did in 2009, the arena will continue to pursue musical productions and will host its first opera, "Carmen."

The runner-up to the O2 is the Garden, which grossed $72.9 million and drew more than 1 million people to 83 shows. Sold-out concerts at the 20,000-plus-capacity arena in 2009 included Swift, Spears, Bruce Springsteen, the Killers, Green Day, Metallica, Beyoncé, Pink, Rascal Flatts, the Dead, Kiss and Kings of Leon.

Among the Garden's other highlights were the April opening of Dave Matthews Band's recent tour, Jay-Z's sold-out Sept. 11 benefit performance in support of the New York Police and Fire Widows' and Children's Benefit Fund and the two-night benefit concert for the 25th anniversary of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, according to MSG Entertainment COO Melissa Ormond.

"2009 proved to be a strong year for conce and special events at Madison Square Garde spite of the economy," Ormond says. "From r to pop to country, the biggest names in mu made the Garden a stop on their tour."

In Australia, Pink set a new record at M bourne's Rob Laver Arena, selling out 17 c certs. Other acts that helped the 16,820-capa venue place third on the year-end list were J Spears, Alicia Keys, continued on >>p

Billboard

2009 10,001-15,000

Pluck of the Irish: The O2 in Dublin ranks No. 1 on the year-end recap of venues with a capacity between 10,001 and 15,000.

MIDSIZE GIANTS

O2 Dublin, Radio City And Caesars Palace Are Tops In Their Class By Mitchell Peters

THE 2009 CONCERT SEASON PROVED to be a steady year for midsize venues across the globe. The halls continued to fill dates with a variety of entertainment including top-name touring acts, family shows and other creative bookings.

In addition to the Top 10 Venues recaps of 15,001-plus capacity arenas, amphitheaters and stadiums, Billboard's Year in Music & Touring includes charts ranking smaller facilities in multiple categories.

The O2 in Dublin takes the No. 1 slot on the Top 10 Venues tally for buildings with capacities between 10,001 and 15,000. Radio City Music Hall in New York again captures the No. 1 ranking on the Top 10 Venues recap for facilities with capacities between 5,001 and 10,000. The Colosseum at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas retains its No. 1 position on the Top 10 Venues chart for buildings with capacities of 5,000 seats and fewer.

Along with the top 10 charts ranking stadiums, arenas and sheds, these three charts are based on Billboard Boxscore grosses compiled between Dec. 6, 2008, and Nov. 21, 2009.

O2 Dublin/Live Nation Ireland CEO Mike Adamson says part of the venue's success in 2009 stems from its new amphitheater design. The venue reopened last December after being closed for 14 months for rebuilding.

"Our goal was to enhance the concertgoing experience via minimum seat-to-stage distances for all with superb auditorium acoustic qualities," Adamson says.

He notes that concerts by Pink, Snow Patrol, Tina Turner, Kings of Leon, Beyoncé, Coldplay, Lionel Richie, the Killers, Bob Dylan, AC/DC, Andrea Bocelli, Green Day, Fleetwood Mac, Paul McCartney and Miley Cyrus helped drive business at the O2 during the period.

The 14,000-seat facility grossed $32.2 million and drew nearly 423,600 concertgoers to 48 shows.

from >>p134 Entertainment Centre in Australia trails behind the O2, reporting $24.5 million in grosses for 29 shows. Ranking third is the 13,000-capacity National Indoor Arena in Birmingham, U.K., which grossed $15.4 million from 28 events that drew 234,021 concertgoers.

At Radio City Music Hall, two sellouts by Leonard Cohen, performances by Dora the Explorer, Flight of the Conchords and the widely touted political speaker series the Minds That Move the World helped the 5,901-capacity venue ring up $93.7 million and draw more than 1.3 million people to 273 events during the 2009 chart year.

Radio City Music Hall continued to draw special events including the Mandela Day Concert.

"Radio City's diverse event bookings continued to contribute to a successful year," MSG Entertainment COO Melissa Ormond says. "Radio City continued to attract special events featuring the biggest names in music, including the David Lynch Benefit Concert and the Mandela Day Concert."

The runner-up to Radio City is Mexico City's Auditorio Nacional, which reported $44.8 million in grosses from 242 performances in 2009. Venue COO Luis Carlos Romo says the past 12 months have been the most successful period since the venue reopened 18 years ago.

MSG Entertainment's WaMu Theater at Madison Square Garden in New York placed third in the year-end tally for venues with capacities between 5,001 and 10,000, earning $32.2 million from 151 events that drew 487,225 people to the 5,610-capacity building.

"In the current economic environment, promoters tend to seek out venue sizes such as the WaMu Theatre or Radio City where they have a greater opportunity to sell out and add shows based on additional demand," Ormond says, citing such successful WaMu shows as Kathy Griffin and Van Morrison.

In 2009, with the help of residency stars Cher and Bette Midler, the Colosseum at Caesars Palace rang up $84.7 million and drew more than 625,000 fans to 194 shows. Other artists who contributed to that number include Jerry Seinfeld and Elton John, whose "The Red Piano" residency drew to a close with the final 22 engagements in February and April.

At No. 2 behind the Colosseum is the Fox Theatre in Atlanta, which reported a gross of $28.7 million from 252 shows that drew 564,408 fans in 2009.

Ranking third on the Top 10 Venues tally of buildings with capacities of 5,000 or less is New York's Beacon Theatre. The 2,900-capacity venue experienced a "huge year," according to Ormond, who cites sellouts by Paul Simon to help reopen the venue after a seven-month restoration as a major highlight.

"The momentum continued with the Allman Brothers Band igniting the Beacon with 15 sold-out shows in celebration of their 40th anniversary," she says.

"A primary focus for the Beacon this year was to leverage [MSG Entertainment's] unique partnerships and assets within the MSG family to attract bookings, promote shows and ultimately offer a one-of-a-kind experience to artists playing our legendary venue by garnering national television programming attention and serve as a platform for artists to reach their fans," Ormond says.

Other noteworthy highlights at the Beacon included concerts by Dave Matthews Band, Steely Dan and John Mayer, Ormond says. ••••

WHEN WE WERE TEN...

IT WAS A VERY GOOD YEAR.

Frank would have been delighted for us, we're sure.

In the past 10 years, we've been one of the top 10 music venues and this summer saw us rock with sell-out shows from Oasis, Take That and U2.

With capacities ranging from 12,500 to 73,000 we're set fair to make 2010 another good year.

AS TURNSTILES SPIN

How Billboard Boxscore Charts The Live Scene By Bob Allen

TOURING HAS PROVED TO BE A ROBUST part of the world of entertainment, with concert grosses growing from $1.7 billion in 2000 to the unprecedented $4.4 billion-plus in worldwide ticket sales this year. Billboard's weekly Boxscore charts provide a snapshot of the ins and outs and highs and lows of this business called touring.

The year 2009 was highlighted by two major success stories: U2's massive 360° tour that sold out stadiums on two continents and ended the year as Billboard's highest-grossing tour, and Madonna's Sticky & Sweet tour that solidified her claim as the top solo touring artist in Billboard Boxscore history. With the touring charts in this Year in Music issue, we profile those touring artists, venues and concert promoters that have made major success on the road a reality.

The Year in Music touring charts are based on box-office totals reported during the 2009 chart year, which began with the Dec. 6, 2008, issue and ended with the Nov. 21, 2009, issue. The Boxscores that were reported during that span make up the data from which we produce our year-end charts. The touring charts, ranked by gross, are based on ticket sales from venues throughout the world.

Boxscore data is reported to Billboard from a variety of sources. Concert promoters provide the bulk of the box-office stats, but many venues report their own totals. Reports are also received from artist representatives, management or booking agents. Included in this issue are charts ranking the top tours of the year, top promoters, top Boxscores (individual concert engagements), top festivals and top venues in six categories based on size and type. Concert acts include bands, solo singers and vocal groups, rappers, orchestras, choral ensembles, comedians and performance artists.

Billboard ranks the top-grossing tours, venues and promoters twice per year, for the Year in Music issue and also during the summer for the midyear touring recaps. But Boxscore coverage is ongoing throughout the year. Boxscore charts are compiled on a weekly basis and appear on three platforms. The traditional Boxscore chart appears each week in the printed copy of Billboard ranking the week's 35 top-grossing concerts. But separate Boxscore charts are produced and posted each week on Billboard's Web sites.

The Boxscore chart on Billboard.biz includes every concert that was reported during the seve day reporting period prior to the day it goes o line. Reported concerts will chart the week they reported and remain on the site until the ch is refreshed the following week. The Billboard. chart varies in length from week to week depe ing on how many concerts were reported.

Traditionally fewer concerts occur in t winter months than during the busy summ season with stadiums and amphitheaters full swing, and the Billboard.biz chart refle that. In the winter, concert activity can be slo yet during the summer—with superstars li Bruce Springsteen, AC/DC, Kenny Chesn and Paul McCartney filling stadiums as th did this year—reporting can increase dram ically. There were several times during t summer when more than 500 concerts we reported in one week.

Finally, there's the Top Tours chart on o consumer Web site, Billboard.com. This ch is different from the other two that are co piled from Boxscore data. It's also updat every week, but instead of listing each conc that was reported, it compiles all the shows each tour and ranks the artists themselves, the individual concerts. This chart is bas only on what was reported during the pre ous week. It's not a running total of the yea top-grossing tours but a representation of w was reported during a particular week. T Top Tours chart ranks the week's top 10 arti by reported tours and lists each individ venue that was reported for those 10 tours

All Boxscores that are reported to Billbo are counted when we compile the year-end a midyear rankings, regardless of whether t charted in the magazine or were included in o of the 10 Hot Tours on Billboard.com. The prin chart only lists the 35 top-grossing concerts e week, so most of the reported concert Boxsco never appear in the magazine, but they're counted when compiling the touring charts the Year in Music issue.

Summer nights: KENNY CHESNEY is among the superstars whose summer stadium shows bring a spike in Boxscore reports.

TOP 10 TRENDS OF THE DECADE

1 FUTURE SHOCK

New Digital Platforms Left The Recording Industry Playing Catch-Up By Ed Christman

As the millennium began, record labels saw the Internet in a very clear way: It was a medium that would allow word-of-mouth about music to spread even faster and generate a new outlet for artist compensation.

When the labels planned their digital future, it was based on the idea that customers would buy music downloads from an online store and then pass on their new favorite songs to their friends for a predetermined number of plays. Once those plays timed out, there would be an embedded link to buy the song.

Companies like InterTrust, Microsoft and AT&T Lab's a2b Music huddled with labels to talk about how music would be sold over the Internet. They envisioned an environment where customers going to online stores would purchase music encrypted with digital rights management to enable this controlled super distribution. In their vision, music would be sold from secure encrypted downloads that would ensure that labels were compensated for music.

If only it turned out that simple.

Near the end of 1998, the music industry created the Secure Digital Music Initiative, which had the goal of ensuring that digital music players and devices would only play encrypted, legally authorized music and that all players come equipped for interoperability, no matter the codec used for music files.

Despite the best intentions—and hundreds of deals and startups founded to build the infrastructure to sell digital downloads—the online industry didn't progress in a rational way. With piracy rampant and no controls in place, the industry was forced to constantly maneuver to put the MP3 genie back in the bottle and maintain the often-cited "perceived value of music."

At a time when the industry would have loved to play offense and embrace new technology and its revenue streams, it found itself perpetually on the defense, attempting to control distribution through its own infrastructure and restrictive licensing policies.

The majors began their digital efforts with the goal of building and owning an infrastructure that could enable high-volume file downloading and streaming in a secure, competitive environment "that would have supported great innovation," an executive from a technology company involved in these early efforts says. "Instead, the music industry becomes an armed camp to the point where litigation is now a revenue line for most owners of large master holders and publishing companies."

And it soon became apparent that the cost of building this kind of infrastructure made the entire vision unwieldy. "It's easy to place MP3s up on the Web," one major-label executive says. "But when you have to encode every song file with metadata and then ensure everyone gets paid their share, it takes hundreds of people with computers to try and manage that data, which is a very time-consuming and costly process."

Besides the cost, there was the issue of control, which ultimately would stifle the creativity of small groups of outside entrepreneurs looking to develop digital initiatives for music. The problem was that the majors initially wouldn't license music to anyone other than each other. Since they weren't licensing music to hardly anyone, the majors had to show music was available for sale on the Internet to gain the government's and the judicial system's support on copyright issues.

This led to fledgling stopgap measures that seemingly never stood a chance of resonating with the public as the ease and speed of piracy continued unabated. So even though Sony opened a download store from 2000 to 2002, "probably less than 100 people bought downloads in those two years," a former company executive says.

"There were early notions that if you had t right infrastructure, you could control the d tiny of music distribution on the net," says La Miller, who headed AT&T Lab's a2b Music.

The first company to coax the majors to rectly license large amounts of music to outsid was Apple, through its newly launched iTur Music Store in 2003. With the immediately su cessful launch of the online store, all other forts to monetize music on the Internet instan became outdated, and it opened up a floodg of new thinking on the part of the majors, wh began licensing music to other services with v ious business models.

Today, at the end of the decade, the music dustry has finally evolved to what its critics w clamoring for at its beginning. All four majors music in an unrestricted MP3 format and they licensed music to many different kinds of dig service providers, which have various busin models, including ones that involve free mus

"[The labels] thought that they would have Web site and codec that would be the place a way to buy music because the market share the two majors would lure consumers to the and its traffic would force the other majors a indie labels to play ball," another executive volved in the early days of building the dig music marketplace says. "I told them, 'You crazy. You can't control the Internet.' "

Instead of controlling the Internet, the jors lost control of music, a former major-la president says. "They always thought they co win back control with a magic formula," he s "In the meantime, a whole generation of pot tial buyers were lost to them when they ali ated that group of young music lovers, v thought taking music off the Internet was same as taking information off the Internet therefore not stealing."

2 THE MUSIC INDUSTRY CONSOLIDATES

A wave of consolidation during the past decade turned the music industry into a wild frontier. On virtually all fronts—including recorded music, publishing, live entertainment and retailing—companies big and small merged in an effort to gain any kind of competitive advantage in an increasingly fraught marketplace.

Faced with plunging recorded-music sales, the major labels began diversifying into management, merchandising, agencies and promotion, driven by a search for new revenue, not just economies of scale and higher market share. Universal Music Group took its first foray into management with its 2007 acquisition of Sanctuary Group, which also gave it the Bravado merchandise company. Warner Music Group created a joint venture with Violator Management in 2007 and in 2009 unveiled new artist services and touring/merchandise divisions in Central Europe. Labels and publishers also used acquisitions to beef up their core businesses as well, such as when WMG bought Rykodisc in 2006 and Universal Music Publishing Group acquired BMG Music Publishing in 2007.

The decade started with five major labels, ended with four and could soon be down to three. Sony Music and BMG Music merged in 2004 and Bertelsmann sold Sony its 50% stake in the joint venture four years later. As 2009 comes to a close, EMI's precarious financial situation once again sparked speculation that WMG, which tried to acquire EMI earlier in the decade, may try again in the coming years.

The sharp decline in music sales also triggered a shakeout in music retailing, with Tower Records, Virgin Megastore and Circuit City all closing and Trans World Entertainment acquiring Disc Jockey, Wherehouse Entertainment and Musicland. Consolidation also swept through the more buoyant artist management and live promotion sectors. Irving Azoff's Front Line Management, acquired by Ticketmaster in 2008, was a leading investor in smaller management companies during the latter half of the decade. Clear Channel's SFX Entertainment subsidiary, a leading consolidator of promoters, continued its acquisitive ways after being spun off in 2005 as Live Nation, picking up merch firm Signatures and music e-commerce company Musictoday. With merchandising added to its menu of ticketing, promotion and sponsorship services, Live Nation was able to strike multirights contracts with such acts as Madonna, Nickelback, Shakira and Jay-Z.

As the decade closes, regulators are mulling whether to approve the proposed merger of Live Nation and Ticketmaster. With a decision expected in early 2010, the face of the music industry could soon change yet again. —Glenn Peoples

3 THE EVOLUTION OF THE TICKET

At the start of the decade, a concert ticket was a piece of paper sold at a store, over the phone, online or at the box office that admitted fans into the venue. Ten years later, no other aspect of the concert business is the focus of so much attention. While tickets are still sold through the same channels, the transaction and all things attached to it have endured a sea change.

Gone are the days of the 10 a.m. Saturday morning on-sale for all tickets to an event. By the time tickets for hot shows go on sale to the general public, there are often few left to buy on the primary market because they're only made available after various presales orchestrated through fan clubs, sponsors or VIP programs. On many tours now, presales are, for all practical purposes, the de facto public on-sale.

The emergence of an online secondary market generated controversy but it's clear it meets a demand in the market. Consumers have shown they want to purchase tickets on their own schedules, and many of them are willing to pay premium prices.

A month before Ticketmaster and Live Nation announced their plans to merge, the latter had launched its own ticketing company. While generating revenue by selling its own tickets played a role, the primary reason Live Nation wanted to control its ticketing was to manage the fan connection and the treasure trove of data it holds. Knowing who buys each ticket, what they're willing to pay and how to contact them is the dream of any promoter or music marketer. This information provides targeted marketing opportunities for future shows and products and directs consumers to promoter, venue or ticketing company Web sites. Indeed, Ticketmaster has evolved to become a full-service marketing company that not only sells tickets but also boosts sales of tickets and other products. During the past decade, the ticket-buying transaction became a sales channel to sell upgrades and bundled packages that can include music, merch, fan club memberships or amenities and an ever-growing menu of products. The ticketing market will continue to evolve, with pricing becoming more strategic and more dynamic. —Ray Waddell

4 THE DEATH OF RETAIL

BY RUSS SOLOMON, FOUNDER OF TOWER RECORDS AN OWNER OF INDIE STORE R5 IN SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

I think [music retail] died, but maybe it will come back to lif It's really a sad commentary on the overall attitude of the m jors as a group. Some of them are better than others. The have turned their back on [physical] retail and think that di ital will save them. They took away all the resources fro them to concentrate on digital, especially at the top level the music companies.

We drove the kids out of the record stores [at the begi ning of the decade] when we cut out the single—somethin they could afford. If you don't capture the young, you don have any future. Lose the kids, you lost the war. Find the kic and give them something to hold in their hands, and you ha a real future.

Now if they're listening to music, it's digitally, but I don think kids have the enthusiasm for music that they used have. Today music is not important to the kids. The indust has to figure out how to get the kids to [understand] that it more than a sound—it's an object and fashion. Old peop still buy CDs but they are going to die off. The only way grow is to give kids music that they can hold in their hand You need a tangible product for them to buy.

If you really want to look at the future of music retail, lo at Hastings Entertainment. They are a book dealer; they s videos, magazines, electronics, music and used product for categories all under one roof. Also you have to look at the ind stores, which are different in that they go for niche marketi Those guys are concentrating on music and on used produ which I don't think builds new business, but those stores st alive because they are into music and capture collectors. Th exist and flourish for themselves as businesses, but there no foundation to build that sector because there is no supp for them from the industry. —As told to Ed Christm

5 REALITY MUSIC PROGRAMMING BREAKS OUT

While musical variety shows have a long history on TV—"American Bandstand" debuted in 1952 and "Soul Train" premiered in 1971—the addition of a competitive element to the proceedings attracted a tidal wave of viewers for U.S. versions of U.K. shows like "American Idol" and "Dancing With the Stars." Amid the distractions of hundreds of cable and satellite networks, the Internet and movies on demand, that kind of emotional investment in a got-to-see-it-live TV show means big audiences—and, for the music industry, an outlet to generate sales.

In eight seasons, "American Idol" has churned out eight contestants who have had albums certified platinum by the RIAA: Kelly Clarkson, Ruben Studdard, Clay Aiken, Carrie Underwood, Chris Daughtry, Fantasia, Taylor Hicks and David Cook. After "Idol" teamed with iTunes in its seventh season to offer studio versions of the songs performed during the competition, the singles market took off—and now iTunes sells performance videos as well. But it's not just the "Idol" contestants that benefit from the show's sales boost, it's also the original writers and performers of the works.

Reality music TV programming now stands at a crossroads. Since 2006, average viewership for "American Idol" has fallen from 30 million to 25.1 million, according to Nielse More important, where did most America first see Susan Boyle, the out-of-nowhere art who went on to have the best single sales we of 2009? Sure, it was from a clip of her pe formance on music reality show "Britain Got Talent." But it was disseminated globa by YouTube.

6 'SELLING OUT' BECOMES 'BUYING IN'

BY JON COHEN, CO-CEO OF CORNERSTONE

When we started in the '90s, it was still considered sacrilegious for bands to work with brands. There were very few deals and very little licensing.

I think electronic music paved the way for artists and brands to work together in a lot of respects, too. The genre is very friendly toward synchs and brings an energy that works in a lot of advertising. Most electronic artists are producers and DJs and can adapt or create music that fits a specific need. I also think it was a genre in its early days that did not get as much support from radio and MTV and needed an opportunity to expose its music.

Such games as "Grand Theft Auto" in 1997 and big sports franchises like Electronic Arts were also crucial in getting artists comfortable with licensing. The people who were more daring and willing to license tracks started with lifestyle deals. It was revolutionary when Sprite came to us and wanted to build their brand around hip-hop. Unfortunately, they abandoned the direction and have not stuck with music.

A great modern example is Mountain Dew's Green Label Sound, which is now about to enter its third year and has planted the seeds for some amazing careers. Nike has used people's passion for music to encourage more exercise and create new ways to interact with their products while offering artists some great partnerships at the same time.

Overall, there is much more of an openness from artists when it comes to branding. Licensing and brand partnerships have [become] part of the marketing mix alongside radio promotion, press and other things.

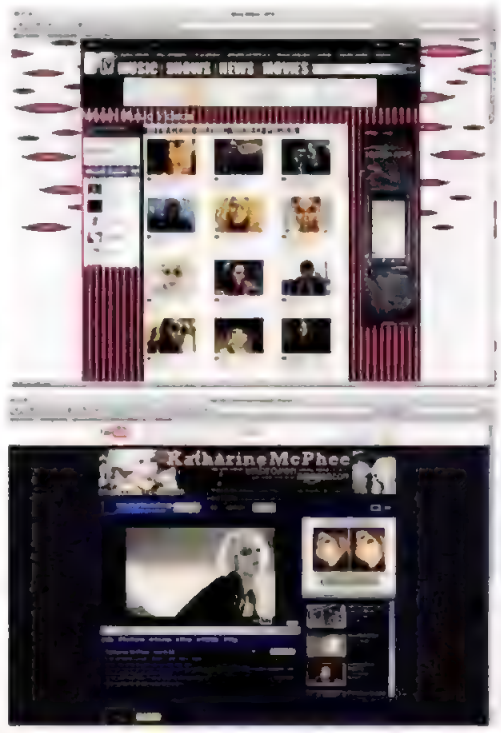
7 MUSIC VIDEOS MIGRATE ONLINE



BY TOM FRESTON, PRINCIPAL AT FIREFLY3; FORMER CEO OF MTV NETWORKS AND VIACOM

It seemed sort of a fait accompli from the beginning that music videos would migrate online. Rather than wait for your favorite music video to air, why not go online and get it immediately and watch it repeatedly?

In the late '80s, we came to the realization that for MTV to grow its ratings it had to move beyond music videos, which we feared could become a commodity. We saw the falloff in TV viewing for music videos. No matter how you mixed or matched them or how many countdowns you did, it was hard to build an audience beyond that true, hard music core.

In the early days, music videos were basically made available for free in exchange for the promotional value [the labels] felt they would get from airing them on TV. For a long period of time in the '80s and '90s when there was a mass cable audience, there were countless stories about artists selling just tons of records off the back of videos.

As the returns began to diminish, and as MTV and others began to program less of them, I thi music videos for a while were looked at as some sort of van expense. Gradually, the labels beg to extract licenses for them from t Yahoos of the world. That amount money began to increase to the po where they could actually cover t costs of the music videos and mak profit to boot. So they went from be a promotion medium to being c tent in and of themselves. Now th are sold and monetized. You can b them on iTunes.

Screen savers: As TV moved away from music video programming, the Internet picked up the pace.

It used to be MTV and VH1 an handful of radio stations [were wh really drove [music promotion]. Th had mass audiences of active mu consumers. People would sit ba and have music videos played them. They didn't control what th saw, but they would see things th may not have chosen themselves

The online experience is very ferent. You are looking generally something you know or already he of. There's a lot less surprise involv You're less likely to stumble o something. That put a whole dif ent wrench into the standard mu business promotional machine.

INDIE LABELS STRIKE BACK

As the Internet broke down barriers to market entry, the past decade was one of unprecedented opportunities for independent artists and labels.

"The playing field became more level for indie labels during the past decade," Sub Pop co-founder Jonathan Poneman says. "This is mostly because there is not such a stranglehold on promotional outlets like radio and retail space. The dominant retailer now is iTunes, and while they have ways of making things prominent, they don't have the same pay-to-play model that brick-and-mortar retailers had."

iTunes parent Apple also offered select artists a much valued promotional platform through its ads for iPods and iMacs. It was part of the burgeoning market for indie-music synchs in TV ads and primetime shows, many of which sought hip—and low-cost—sounds to hook young viewers. Licensing and social media gave birth to indie stars like Ingrid Michaelson, who landed an Old Navy ad after she was discovered on MySpace. Michaelson went on to sell 286,000 copies of her debut album, "Girls & Boys," according to Nielsen SoundScan.

The indie boom didn't just benefit newcomers. Superstars like Radiohead, the Eagles and Garth Brooks all left major labels and found new ways to release their music. Radiohead posted its "In Rainbows" album online with a "name your own price" concept, before distributing physical copies through ATO and RED. Brooks and the Eagles released music exclusively through Wal-Mart. Even Pearl Jam struck a partnership with Target to put out "Backspacer," its first album in the United States not on a major label.

The numbers reflect these new opportunities. When major-owned indie distributors are factored in, the indie sector's U.S. market share climbed from 16.3% in 2000 to 23.4% in 2009. —Cortney Harding

Decoding the multirights deal: PARAMORE

9 EMERGENCE OF THE MULTIRIGHTS DEAL

BY JOHN JANICK, PRESIDENT OF FUELED BY RAMEN/CO-PRESIDENT OF ELEKTRA

The multirights deal, overall, has been good for the industry. It's been the way I've always run my label. When we started Fueled by Ramen, the only way we could get stuff to fans was by mail order, so it made sense for us to buy a printing press and get into doing merch. It all happened naturally, and when you do it the right way, synergies emerge.

You can get more floor space in a given retail outlet because you can sell a package that combines merch and an album. You can see that a band is playing in Chicago and starting to get radio play, so you can push more albums to stores there and do more marketing. You can keep a band on the road for a long time, like we did with Paramore, and build their career, because you're not only concerned with selling albums.

I always say I'll do pretty much anything for my artists, because I've invested so much—I don't think we're taking money from artists. If anything, this type of deal allows you to keep a closer watch on the money and be incentivized to monetize different things and be creative.

Other companies say things like, "We're not in the ticket business," which I think is shortsighted. That said, some labels are definitely not prepared to do multirights deals. But when you have a strong infrastructure, like we do at Warner, and can be in the ticket business, the merch business, the publishing business, then you are doing a service for your artists. Their concerns aren't all in silos anymore. The label has put more on the line and invested more, and they have a bigger incentive to really work on building a career. Of course, not every multirights deal includes all rights. There are plenty that are just merch or publishing or touring or fan clubs or any combination of those.

For a long time, everyone was so used to just making money from album sales, and now there is no way to just sit back and collect revenue—you have to go out and earn it.

10 INVESTORS DISCOVER PUBLISHING CATALOGS

BY JOHN RUDOLPH, CEO OF BUG MUSIC

This is obviously the decade where Wall Street investo discovered the music publishing business. When Ev Meadow and I were trying to sell Windswept on behalf Fuji TV to EMI in 1999, we talked to a bunch of banks a private equity firms. But no one could understand the pu lishing business, even though the [David] Bowie bon were happening and the rating agencies were starting pay attention to music. No one would loan against mu publishing, unless it was part of a bigger company.

In 2001, the Chrysalis Group did a securitization a that was the first time that an outside third-party ba the Royal Bank of Scotland, came in and set up fina ing on music publishing. It was a pretty big deal, and w that there started to be data that other investors cou look at.

[Songwriters] Lieber & Stoller owned Trio Music a Quartet Music and sold them to Windswept [and Itoc in 2003, and that attracted some interest from private uity. But one of the big catalysts was the 2003 acquisiti of the Warner Music Group, of which music publishi was a major piece, from Time Warner by an investor gro All of the big banks showed up to provide debt financ for the big equity firms who said, "Look at this busine we like it, and this is why." When that happened, the d side of the street and other private equity firms star sniffing around music publishing. The year [2006] clo with BMG Music Publishing up for sale, and althoug was sold to Universal Music Publishing, that deal attrac more interested financial investors to the music publi ing sector due to its size.

Eventually, investment companies began to underst that music publishing income performed on a stable tra tory of income, which they could understand.

SIGNS OF TROUBLE

RUDOLPH: I think in the 1990s when the record companies started selling to big-box stores and they started using music as the loss leader, that was the start of the devaluing of music. Indie stores got annihilated. The industry saw what was happening, but got stuck on selling to the big stores. The labels weren't making anymore money with the sale pricing, but they were paying attention to the value of the infrastructure and the long tail that record stores provided. This decade was the further devaluing of music.

FAXON: I did have concerns about the industry back [in 2000], particularly that the recorded-music side of the business was not effectively anticipating or dealing with the changes that were occurring. I have to say that I didn't think there would be as prolonged of a decline in the recorded-music industry as there has been, but equally I wasn't as optimistic as I should have been about the growth of other revenues, particularly as they affect the music publishing business.

STRINGER: The mythology the industry was that it wou never end. And I think the war ing signs were there. CD co sumption had started to pea and digital piracy was startir to rise. It's a gargantuan indu try, the recording industry, a no one wants to be the first pe son to say, "Well actually, gue what? It's going to be five tim smaller in 10-15 years." The were only so many times pe ple would buy the catalog records they already boug and only so many times ki would be told they could download.

'There were only so many times people would buy the catalog of records they already bought and only so many times kids would be told they couldn't download.'

—ROB STRINGER

URIE: I thought that the CD would go down pretty much as it had, but thought it would level in the latter part of the decade. I thought that digital and subscription would be much more brant than it is now. Most of all, I thought that we would be better at marketing and finding ways monetize the product. I have always said that the promise of the Internet and its No. 1 benefit to t music business is marketing, and not distribution. I thought we would be better in using Internet m keting to get people to be willing to pay for music by now.

'I was incredulous that so many were in denial about the future. I caught a lot of shit from my music industry friends for the release of Gnutella, but for me it was simply unlocking the inevitable.'

—IAN ROGERS

ROGERS: It was already clear music was about to undergo "the great unbundling" and the business would move from $17 discs at Best Buy to singles online, but the industry was still denying it and looking for a way to make CD sales last forever. Personally, I was incredulous that so many were in denial about the future. I caught a lot of shit from my music industry friends for the release of Gnutella, but for me it was simply unlocking the inevitable. I was naive—while it was obvious to those of us who could clearly see the technology trajectory, incumbent businesses aren't capable of disrupting themselves.

HANSEN: With file sharing a the early stages of digital musi seemed like something was ab to happen. But we weren't th scratching our heads and hung on piracy. We were thinking ab how to create more word- mouth and awareness for mu and our artists. We didn't have answers then but we saw plenty opportunities.

MISSTEPS

ROGERS: Countless dollars were spent as technology companies tried to assist in the inevitable unbundling, building technology platforms (Windows Media/Janus, MusicNet, Intertrust), consumer services (Yahoo, Real, imeem) and devices (iRiver, Samsung, Creative, SanDisk) which couldn't compete due to a disintegrated value chain and restrictions and unfavorable licensing terms by an industry terrified of the inevitable unbundling. These wasted dollars are black marks on music's reputation as an industry, and now investment in the space is more challenged than ever as entrepreneurs and investors alike find other industries to innovate with their time and money.

'It was bad for anyone who can't drive, since I hear that's the next thing to go for major-label presidents—their chauffeurs.'

—KEVIN LYMAN

COHEN: People in charge of the music business were completely out of position and flat-footed, not progressive enough, nor had the relationship with the fans to recognize the opportunities of the digital era. I believe there's a small segment of people who want to dedicate their lives to breaching and tricking the system by stealing. But the majority of consumers want ease, access and an affordable price. I think we focused on too many defensive measures.

LYMAN: It was [a good decade] for those who have realized that there is a way to be in music and make a living by working hard, keeping your overhead low and embracing technology. It was bad for anyone who can't drive, since I hear that's the next thing to go for major-label presidents—their chauffeurs. They have to let them go since they have gotten rid of all the young talent that could help them sell records.

'People in charge of the music business were completely out of position and flat-footed, not progressive enough, nor had the relationship with the fans to recognize the opportunities of the digital era.'

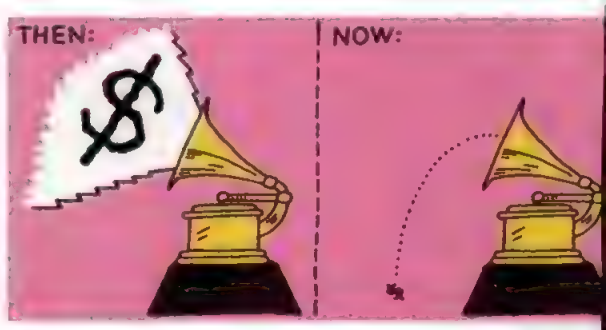
—LYOR COHEN

DEVELOPMENTAL ISSUES

KNOWLES: Change the focus back to artist development, which was missing in this decade. Every album out of the box isn't going to sell 500,000 or a million. We have to adopt the mindset where we embrace and spend appropriately for artists, begin operating like the independents and don't throw something on the wall and hope it sticks. We have to be more selective.

COHEN: The primary thing missing from this decade, which is the Warner signature, is artist development: the incubation, the long-term belief and support of artists over the long term. I think that was a huge void in our industry, when they were trying to defend very heavy infrastructures and thus the invention of quick facts and in-a-hurry results versus incubation and artist development.

PLATT: Artist development has to be a part of our business again in a major way. We have to make new stars. We can't continue to think we're going to find the next guy who's going to give us one or two albums, then go onto the next guy who's going to give us one or two albums. We have to get back into building careers again.



GREENWALD: We have to be able to fight against the pre sure to turn and produce something quick. Real artists take tim they need sunlight and water. For me, that's my biggest need:
stay with a project for as long as necessary. Maybe it takes un the second or third album versus the pressure this industry pu on baby acts.

RENZER: Are we creating enough superstars that the listene will have loyalty to? Is it a question of the way that music is market and broken today? Is "American Idol" and that style of artist pu ting pressure on the music industry to create a hit out of the bo Music is more diverse and people are finding it in new ways. Wh various subgenres are doing OK, it doesn't feel like we are cre ing as many global superstars today.

BANDIER: Music has not prospered because record labels didn't spend any money on artist development or marketing—and when they did spend money on marketing, it was only for platinum artists. They didn't spend the time and energy to foster a new wave of talent.

LET'S GET SMALL

LEWIS: Everything's become more challenging, no question. But on the other hand, I don't see it going away. Maybe it gets smaller. It's not like the music business wasn't small when I started 35 years ago, much smaller than it is now, particularly in Nashville. There were little outposts here back in the '70s. There were A&R outposts maybe with a promotions staff, and not much more than that. So maybe it all gets small again. I can't say it's particularly rosy but if you keep your head down and you're smart about the business, there is a business. There are opportunities for people who are smart and aggressive and fortunate.

COHEN: In many ways, we're back to the beautiful era where people in our industry are back to the basics and not fixated on all the trappings—the limousines and the private planes and all of that stuff—but on the music and about artists: engaging the artist and having intimate relationships with the artist, and not just waiting for the artist to send their masters in. I think that we tore down the infrastructure and the highfalutin behavior and got back to what was missing.

STRINGER: In a strange sort of way, I think the creativity now, a the selectivity about how we really do the right things prope is far more exciting than it was 10 years ago. I honestly beli that. And if we have to go back to the size the industry wa 1972 or 1962, that's absolutely fine. I don't think it's a coincide that so much of the creativity came out of when we were sma
It was less people thinking more deeply. Why wouldn't we back to that model and build back up from that again?

THE IMPACT OF APPLE

LEONI-SCETI: The iPod/iTunes phenomenon transformed the face of the music business. It was so successful because it was a response to a question asked to consumers: "What would you like to do when you are experiencing music?" And the answer was, "I want to have all my music available, I want to have it in a way that doesn't require a big piece of equipment for me to listen to it, I want it to be single tracks and not albums, etc." Apple is very good at that: They ask consumers, "What would you like?," and they go in the back room and develop stuff to answer that request. It's not imposed consumption, and the music business needs to think more like that."

HANSEN: The iPod allows people to have their collection with them. Everyone is listening to music more than they were because they have access to it all the time. It's part of their entire life now.

URIE: iTunes is a big story because they were the only ones to g right. At the beginning of the decade you would have thought m people would have come up with a viable alternative. Instead, iTu has become ubiquitous and the business' most dominant retaile

WESTERGREN: The iPhone will turn out to be another mo mental pivot point for the industry. It's the first successful mo computer. That opens up, in the case of radio and the whole ital delivery of music, to get truly ubiquitous.

PARTOVI: The first half of the decade was all about "I" and " (iPod, MySpace); the second half has been about making eve thing more social (Facebook, Twitter and iLike). iPod and iTu delivered the winning experience for individual music consu tion, and MySpace delivered the best platform for indivi self-expression.

'Apple is very good at that: They ask consumers, "What would you like?" . . . The music business needs to think more like that.'

CONSUMER IS KING

'If the consumer wants their music delivered a particular way, then the consumer has, in this age, the ability to achieve that . . . Technology has empowered the consumer to make those choices.'

—ROGER FAXON

FAXON: If the consumer wants their music delivered a particular way, then the consumer has, in this age, the ability to achieve that. As an industry and company you have to be focused on what the consumer wants, not just what you want to give them. In the old world there was a limited pathway to the consumers, so therefore the consumer had less choice and less ability to decide how and what they wanted, and how to get what they wanted and what it was that they wanted. Technology has empowered the consumer to make those choices.

RAPINO: This was a great decade for the music consumer, as music was freed from the living room stereo and available everywhere.

PARTOVI: With Facebook, MySpace and Twitter all increasingly opening access to people's social graphs, both on the Web and mobile, having your friends "present" in some form will eventually become the norm for digital content consumption. And this has even bigger ramifications for content "creation," because every consumer has become a content creator—if we're not writing our own blogs or recording our own songs, we're commenting on other people's creations.

LEONI-SCETI: We should engage with consumers on mo fronts—not just from a contractual perspective, but from a re operational perspective. We should work with artists at maximi ing that relationship, because in the long term that's where th value is created. In our industry, there is artistic innovation, ar the artists are doing a great job. But we also need innovation the way that music is delivered to consumers. The product shou be much more in response to consumer needs than it has bee in the past.

WHAT DIGITAL WROUGHT

STRINGER: It was quite a fragmented period for music. I think the digital explosion is partly responsible for that. There are a thousand artists, a thousand pieces of music that people pick up on, but it doesn't necessarily focus on a core. I'm not saying that's a bad thing, by the way; I'm just saying that's how people consume.

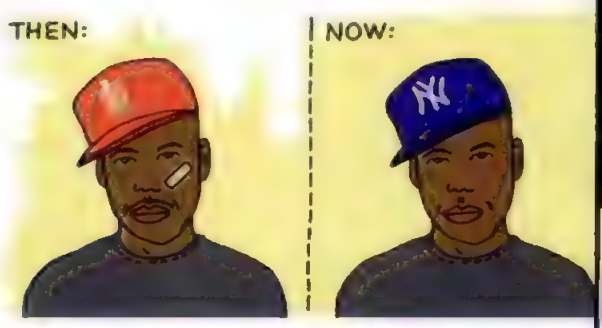
'Social networking has changed how everyone is living lives. It's a fundamental way to get connected with people on music.'

—DAVE HANSEN

HANSEN: Social networking has changed how everyone is living lives, from kids to senior citizens. For marketers like me, it creates the biggest opportunity to talk about music. It's a fundamental way to get connected with people on music. It's changed the game in a great way.

LOPEZ: Now with the arrival of the Internet as part of the distribution chain, we're becoming a multiformat industry. Right now we are in the middle of that change. We have to react faster so we don't end up late, as happened to us in the last decade.

CREATIVE TRENDS



LEWIS: At the tail end of [the decade], all of the sudden there is a youth movement, which is pretty encouraging, and I'm not just talking about Taylor Swift. There's a ton of really young talented people where country isn't stigmatized for them. For the first time in years, I've seen a ton of young singer/songwriters. I think it has a lot to do with the fact that young people have really diverse tastes now.

RENZER: We were surprised by the resilience of hip-hop in the U.S. marketplace, with Eminem still selling millions of records worldwide, 50 Cent still selling a lot of records and Jay-Z back on top. And we are surprised by the resilience of U2.

PLATT: It was a great decade for Southern hip-hop. That was really great to see, because it was probably a good 18-month to two-year period where they carried the culture on their back. You have like a Taylor Swift or Carrie Underwood being embraced in the pop world, where they're not just country artists anymore. And the same for Kanye West, to not just being looked at as a rapper. They're just music stars now.

KNOWLES: We saw and are seeing a transition with music. more eclectic and changing array of pop, hip-hop, R&B and ev country; more cross-pollination of artists collaborating togeth

LEE: We lost two big icons: James Brown and Michael Jackso Both losses are evidence of how important music is to our wor Then there's the fact that hip-hop is still alive. Ten years ago a lot people would have bet, I think, that it wouldn't be around. And it w be around for a long time to come.

'Hip-hop is still alive. Ten years ago a lot of peopl would have bet, I think, that it wouldn't be around And it will be around for a long time to come.'

—DEBRA LEE

EYEING NEW OPPORTUNITIES

JOHNSON: Very broadly speaking, the biggest opportunity for the music industry is to think globally. Take mainland China. Even in the height of the compact disc boom neither record companies nor music publishing companies enjoyed any revenue at all from that country. But now, both businesses make more money from mainland China than they ever did at the height of the CD boom. There is an expanding worldwide customer base and yes, they are consuming music in a different way.

RUDOLPH: The biggest opportunity or need is the right sizing of the cost infrastructure of the business. When things are fat, no one concentrates on fixing the cost side because the overall value chain is working. Now, things are bad so we can fix it and get back to a healthy place again.

ZABALA: New technologies have made it possible for music to reach a bigger audience and how this has changed the ways in which consumers buy music, providing access to different channels. I see this of course as a great challenge as well as a grand opportunity for the music industry.

GREENWALD: I'll be sad if all people want to talk about is the crumbling of the music business and how the industry is dying. There's been so much great music during what's been a crazy state of transformation and change. It's a tough time, but it's not the end, it's not doomsday. It's just change. And with this severe change, we're all learning how to do business differently, for example, like expanded rights deals with artists and growing companies in other ways.

'It's a tough time, but it's not the end, it's not doomsday. It's just change. And with this severe change, we're all learning how to do business differently.'

—JULIE GREENWALD

PARTOVI: For the next few years, there's still enormous opp tunity in making content creation and consumption a truly cial experience, where your friends are "there" for everyth you read, write, hear or watch and where great content spre virally faster than ever. The race is far from over. Facebook, Space and Twitter have shown how great the consumer dem is, but there is a long way to go to fully satisfy it.

NASH: With digital, the biggest area of opportunity is to pr erly capture the creation of value around music content th happening in this connected digital ecosystem. Clearly the pr uct model born of a previous century is not allowing us to capt all the value around our content. So changing our biz model so can connect to the business drivers of our partners that are bu ing out this channel is the greatest area of opportunity.

THE NAME GAME

Eminem, Beyoncé Grab Top Spots On Decade-End Charts By Keith Caulfield

New millennial stars: EMINEM and BEYONCÉ

Eminem earns Billboard's artist of the decade title, fittingly just slightly more than 10 years after he made his Billboard Hot 100 debut.

The decade-end artist recap ranks the best-performing acts of the past 10 years (from Dec. 4, 1999, to Nov. 28, 2009) based on activity on two charts: the Billboard 200 albums list and the Billboard Hot 100 songs tally.

The hip-hop king first graced the Hot 100 chart Feb. 27, 1999, with "My Name Is," then racked up another 27 entries from 2000 onward. On the Billboard 200, all five of his sets released in the decade reached No. 1. Additionally, his debut album, "The Slim Shady LP," debuted and peaked at No. 2 in the spring of 1999, but continued to chart in 2000.

Eminem is also the top male artist of the decade. The female honor goes to Beyoncé, while the top duo/group is Nickelback.

Beyoncé's solo career began in the '00s, notching 23 Hot 100 singles and five No. 1s. On the Billboard 200, she's racked six entries, including three studio efforts that all went to No. 1.

As for Nickelback, its entire Hot 100 history is contained in the '00s and it started off well with its first No. 1, "How You Remind Me." The rock act has since earned five more top 10 singles. The group's last four albums reached the top 10 on the Billboard 200, including the No. 1 set "All the Right Reasons," which spent 156 weeks on the list.

While Eminem is the decade's top artist, he was never the top performer for any single year as reported in Billboard's annual Year in Music issue. In 2000 and 2001, Destiny's Child netted the prize, followed by Nelly in '02, 50 Cent in '03 and '05, Usher in '04, Chris Brown in '06 and '08, Akon in '07 and Taylor Swift in '09.

Eminem helped kick off the decade with a bang, as his second set, "The Marshall Mathers LP," was one of five albums in 2000 to sell at least 1 million copies in one week. On the Billboard 200 dated June 10, 2000, it opened at No. 1 with 1.8 million, just a week after Britney Spears' "Oops! . . . I Did It Again" debuted at No. 1 with 1.3 million and two months after 'N Sync set the one-week Nielsen SoundScan sales high of 2.4 million with "No Strings Attached." "Strings," the pop quintet's second album, tops the decade-end Billboard 200 albums tally, ahead of Usher's "Confessions" (No. 2) and Eminem's "The Eminem Show" (No. 3).

All told, of the 20 biggest one-week sales frames for an album in SoundScan's 18-and-a-half-year history, 14 of them were in the 2000s. On the flip side, of those 14 weeks, only three of them came in the last half of the decade, thanks to the debut weeks of 50 Cent's "The Massacre" (2005, 1.1 million), Kanye West's "Graduation" (2007, 957,000) and Lil Wayne's "Tha Carter III" (2008, 1 million).

So what happened in the late '00s? The collision of supernova-bright pop stars in the early 2000s with the limited availability of commercial singles yielded tremendous album sales achievements and Billboard 200 triumphs. However, by the middle of the decade, those wild and crazy days were mostly a thing of the past, thanks to the single biggest thing to change the music industry and Billboard's charts in 2000s: the Internet.

Once consumers popularized file-sharing services and utilized digital retailers like Apple's iTunes store, the Billboard 200 started to reflect many music buyers' desire for single-song purchases instead of a full album (or even more worrisome, no purchase at all).

In the first half of the 2000s, the No. 1 album on the Billboard 200, on average, sold 399,947 copies in a week. On the Hot 100 Singles Sales chart—which tracked physical singles—the average at No. 1 was just 43,895. Move forward to the second half of the decade, and the No. 1 on the Billboard 200 averaged 286,540, while the No. 1 on Hot Digital Songs averaged 154,445.

Digital retailers provided a jolt of energy to the charts after SoundScan began including download sales in its tallies in 2003. By that point, physical singles were essentially absent from the market, so the availability of individual song downloads juiced the sales/airplay hybrid Hot 100 chart. In turn, the 51-year-old list transformed from a ranking of officially promoted singles to an all-encompassing, anything-goes tally where numerous songs from one act could all chart concurrently.

Case in point: The young, digitally oriented fans of 15-year-old sing
of the songs on his debut CD, "M World," onto the Hot 100, even thou

ALICIA ASCENDANT

Hop Songs and four consecutive chart-toppers on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, Alicia Keys walks off as Billboard's Top R&B/Hip-Hop Artist of the decade.

The singer's 2001 debut album, "Songs in A Minor," reigned over Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums for six weeks and launched a pair of top 10 singles, including the multiformat smash "Fallin'." Keys' A Minor" with "The Diary of Alicia Keys" (2003), "Unplugged" (2005) and "As I Am" (2007). With the exception of her third offering, each set ranks in the top 40 of the decade's Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums. On Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs, Keys' No. 1 singles have led for 41 chart weeks, more than any other artist. Among them, "No One" and "Like You'll Never See Me Again" combined for 17 consecutive weeks at No. 1.

KEYS

Keys' dominance reflects the broader picture of the era's top-ranked acts. Straight-ahead R&B artists like Keys, Beyoncé and Ne-Yo fare better than rap acts on the all-encompassing top artist ranking, despite being responsible for 50 R&B/hip-hop albums. R&B acts account for 31 of the decade's top 50 artists, while rap acts, led by Jay-Z at No. 2, round out the remaining slots. R&B's grip of the Top Artists list is buoyed by its greater appeal at adult R&B and mainstream R&B/hip-hop radio stations. Due to broader airplay across multiple formats of radio, R&B songs generally enjoy a longer life span and are more successful on the chart.

Since 2000, no rap song has spent more than nine weeks at No. 1 or more than 56 chart weeks on the Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs chart. Meanwhile, R&B singles have tallied nine leaders with at least 10 weeks at No. 1 and eight songs that spent at least 60 weeks on the chart. During the decade, "Be Without You" by Mary J. Blige established the record for the most weeks at No. 1 since 1958 (15).

All is not lost for rap. Of the aforementioned Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums, rap holds seven of the top 10 positions. Jay-Z is the genre's Top Album Artist of the decade with 10 No. 1s, the most for any artist. —Raphael George

HOW WE TALLY THE DECADE-END MUSIC CHARTS

Most of the decade-end music charts in this section represent aggregated sales or radio airplay (audience impressions or total plays) for each artist and title from the weekly charts on which they appeared from the start of the 2000 chart year (Dec. 4, 1999) through the end of the 2009 chart year (Nov. 28, 2009).

The sales totals are based on data compiled by Nielsen SoundScan, with radio airplay measured by Nielsen BDS. Sales or airplay registered before or after a title's chart run aren't considered in the Billboard decade-end standings. That detail accounts for some of the differences between these lists and the decade-end recaps that are compiled independently by either SoundScan or BDS. The SoundScan ranking of the best-selling albums of the decade appears on page 174.

Because of changes in Billboard chart methodology during the decade, some rankings are based on a point system, instead of aggregated sales or airplay compiled during a chart run. All recaps for the Billboard Hot 100, R&B Songs and Country Songs utilize an inverse point system, with weeks at No. 1 earning the greatest value and weeks at the lower end of the chart earning the least. This explains why some songs might be ranked in a different order from how they appear in their corresponding year-end rankings.

The top artists of the decade category is based on a formula blending sales point totals from the Billboard 200 recap and recap points from the Hot 100. The top artists category for Latin, country and R&B were determined by employing an inverse point system based on an artist's weekly ranking on each format's respective albums and songs charts. —Keith Caulfield commercial history, the decade in country music largely revolved around male artists, led by Toby Keith, who finishes the 2000s at Billboard's top country artist and ranks as the genre's top songwriter of the past 10 years.

.biz .com Deeper versions of all decade-end charts appear on billboard.com and billboard.biz.

MEN AT WORK

Keith is also No. 1 on the Top Country Albums Artists tally and is the runner-up on the Hot Country Songs Artists list, both viewable at Billboard.biz. He has three songs inside the top 20 of the Country Songs roundup and three titles on the Top Country Albums tally.

Keith Urban registers the decade's top song with "Somebody Like You," which ruled Hot Country Songs for six weeks in 2002. Kenny Chesney finishes as the Top Country Songs Artist, with 46 charting titles in the past 10 years.

Although female artists gained a tremendous amount of ground at country radio during the '90s, the ladies didn't sustain that presence during the '00s. Had it not been for the influence of "American Idol" victor Carrie Underwood, female artists (and female groups) on Billboard's decade-end lists would mostly be confined to the nine female sets that populate the top 20 on Top Country Albums. Jewel, Lonestar, Faith Hill, Martina McBride, Sara Evans, Gretchen Wilson, Jo Dee Messina and Terri Clark all have "Some Hearts" leads.

And within the top 20 of the Hot Country Songs recap, Underwood's "Before He Cheats" (No. 14) is the only track by a female artist.

However, by 2007, the arrival of Taylor Swift significantly elevated the female category on the country charts, where she places two titles inside the top 20 on the Country Albums list.

The Country Albums scorecard for the 10-year period underlines the artist turnover during the decade. The top 10 of the Top Country Albums list is dominated by acts that are currently inactive on the weekly Country Songs chart, including Dixie Chicks, who were the target of a country radio boycott early in the decade after lead singer Natalie Maines publicly criticized President George W. Bush.

Country radio also has a well-documented struggle with attempts to harness the runaway popularity of the "O Brother, Where Art Thou?" soundtrack, which finishes at No. 2 on the Top Country Albums list. Country radio programmers hesitantly—and ultimately awkwardly—took 25 weeks to drag the album's radio single, "I Am a Man of Constant Sorrow," to a No. 35 peak on Hot Country Songs. Yet during its 104 weeks on Top Country Albums, the soundtrack moved more than 6 million copies and has amassed total sales exceeding 7.5 million, according to Nielsen SoundScan. —Wade Jessen

ALBUMS BOOST SOLÍS

Veteran singer/songwriter Marco Antonio Solís rounds out the decade as Billboard's top Latin artist, an achievement earned by his combined performance on the Top Latin Albums and Hot Latin Songs charts during the past 10 years.

While his 20 hit singles on the Latin Songs chart during the decade were impressive, Solís' steady success on the Latin Albums chart really pushed him to the top. Since 2000, he's earned eight No. 1 albums, tying Los Temerarios for the most leaders in that span.

Strangely enough, while Solís was a mainstay on the weekly Latin Albums chart with numerous releases, none of them rank within the top 10 on the decade-end Latin Albums recap. That region of the tally paints a different, much younger picture.

Latin pop songstress Shakira, for example, began her ascent to superstardom at the turn of the decade and is the only female to rank in the top 10 on the top artists recap (No. 8). Her smash single "La Tortura" with Alejandro Sanz spent a record 25 weeks at the summit of Hot Latin Songs in 2005, good enough to garner the No. 3 position on the Hot Latin Songs decade-end rankings.

The youth explosion was also felt thanks to the emergence of the reggaetón movement in the early 2000s. Billboard created the Latin Rhythm chart in 2005 and it became home to such now-household names as Daddy Yankee, Wisin & Yandel and Don Omar.

Four of the top 10 Latin Albums of the decade are credited to rhythmic artists, most notably Daddy Yankee's "Barrio Fino" and "Barrio Fino: En Directo," which finish at Nos. 1 and 3, respectively. Additionally, Daddy Yankee tops the decade's Latin Albums Artists list, viewable at Billboard.biz.

Regardless of age, love still prevails on the Latin charts. This is evidenced by the surprising top two titles on the Hot Latin Songs decade-end tally. No. 2 on the list is rapper Flex's breakout single from 2008, "Te Quiero," which spent 20 weeks at the summit. And the No. 1 title on the Hot Latin Songs decade recap belongs to pop group Son by Four, with its crossover hit "A Puro Dolor." The song spent 20 weeks at the top of Hot Latin Songs in 2000. —Rauly Ramirez

MOVE THE CROWD

Rolling Stones, U2, Dave Matthews Band Are Touring Titans Of The 2000s

By Ray Waddell

A LOOK AT THE TOP TOURS, concerts and venues of the past decade may yield few surprises, but it does herald what could be perceived as a gradual passing of the torch.

When it comes to the highest-grossing touring acts since 2000, it should surprise no one that the Rolling Stones top the list, as they have any list related to box-office success since Michael Cohl began producing their tours in 1989.

But the title of the biggest ticket seller on the planet for the decade goes to Dave Matthews Band, which moved 11,230,696 tickets to 547 shows, according to Billboard Boxscore. No other band topped 10 million in attendance, though U2 came close. What makes DMB's ticket-selling prowess even more remarkable is that it grew without the benefit of international touring, tapping almost exclusively into North American ticket buyers. Save for country acts, nearly all the top-selling artists of the past decade toured overseas markets, many of them playing stadiums across Europe and elsewhere.

For the first decade of the new millennium, the Stones reported grosses totaling $870 continued on >>p170 from >>p168 million to Billboard Boxscore, from 264 shows that moved 8.2 million tickets. The bulk of this touring came from the band's 2005-07 Bigger Bang tour, which remains the top-grossing tour of all time.

But narrowing the gap, and poised to one day take over the mantle of biggest band in the world, is U2, which reported more than $844 million from 288 shows (all sellouts) and nearly 10 million in attendance. And, if all goes to plan, U2's current 360° tour will also assume supremacy as the highest-grossing tour ever.

Madonna is the third and final member of the decade's $800 million club with $801 million in grosses, as well as 6.4 million in attendance from 248 shows. More than half of this dollar total came from Madonna's 2008-09 Sticky & Sweet tour, the biggest ever from a solo artist.

The top 25 list contains familiar veterans who emerged decades ago, including Bruce Springsteen ($688 million), Elton John ($603.8 million), Bon Jovi ($419 million), Billy Joel ($418 million), the Eagles ($348 million), Aerosmith ($347 million), Neil Diamond ($265 million), Cher ($257 million), Paul McCartney ($238 million), Rod Stewart ($234 million), Metallica ($227 million), Jimmy Buffett ($215 million) and Tina Turner ($212 million).

Country has been developing arena-level acts more consistently in recent years, and it shows in the top touring earners of the decade: Kenny Chesney ($478 million and the most shows of any act at 622), Tim McGraw ($304 million), Toby Keith ($272 million) and Rascal Flatts ($222 million) all make the list, and all offer conservative ticket prices.

Youth isn't well-served in the top 25, with Rascal Flatts and Britney Spears the only relative newcomers on the list. Two acts made it on the strength of one tour: the Police for its 2007-08 reunion tour ($362 million) and Celine Dion ($537 million), who toured only once but raked in nearly $400 million from her residency at the Colosseum at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas. The Stones owned the highest per-show average at $3,293,451, followed closely by Madonna at $3,231,047.

Nearly all the top-selling artists of the past decade toured overseas markets.

SUPER GIGS

The highest-grossing engagement of the decade will never be topped at the venue at which it happened. Bruce Springsteen & the E Street Band's record-shattering 10 sellouts at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., in the summer of 2003 was an unqualified monster and remains the highest-grossing Boxscore of all time at $38.7 million (even with a top ticket of $75). Springsteen shows up again at Giants Stadium in the top 25 Boxscores of the decade with this year's venue-closing run that took in $22.6 million from five shows.

Extended runs rule the day and were a trend of the past 10 years. Among them are 21 sellouts by Prince at the O2 in London in 2007 ($22 million), 17 sellouts by the Spice Girls at the continued on >>p172

The Bonnaroo Music & Arts Festival cracked the top 25 twice for its 2007 ($16.8 million) and 2008 ($17 million) events. Bonnaroo would've made it a third time had organizers reported their estimated $17 million-$18 million gross for 2009.

Seventeen of the top 25 Boxscores are from markets outside the United States, which speaks to exchange rates, the growing international appeal of superstar artists and the maturation of the international touring market.

Madison Square Garden is the highest-grossing arena in the world for the decade, with $777 million in box office from 880 shows. All of the top 10 arenas are in North America. For midsize arenas in the 10,000- to 15,000-capacity range, the Atlantic City (N.J.) Boardwalk Hall was tops, with $150 million in box office. Nine of the top 10 amphitheaters are Live Nation sheds (the exception being the DTE Energy Center near Detroit), with the Comcast Center in Mansfield, Mass., coming out on top with $207 million in gross. DTE, however, known for its price promotions and full schedule of events, had the top attendance of any shed at more than 10 million, as well as the most shows at 691.

Thanks in part to Springsteen, Giants Stadium was the top-grossing stadium for concerts in the decade. But six of the top 10 stadiums are international, reflecting a '00s trend of artists playing arenas in North America and stadiums abroad.

On the strength of residencies from the likes of Dion and John, the Colosseum at Caesars Palace is far and away the decade's highest-grossing venue among those with capacities of 5,000 or less. Not taking residencies in account, Atlanta's Fox Theatre did best, with $275 million in the past 10 years. Radio City Music Hall in New York rode its Christmas Spectacular to the top of the pile for 5,000- to 10,000-seat venues at $804 million, even more than sister venue the Garden. ••••

THE FINAL COUNTDOWN

After a decade of unprecedented sales growth in the '90s, the recording industry entered the new millennium with the wind at its back, only to flounder as new digital technologies disrupted traditional business models. By Ed Christman

Sony Music Entertainmen

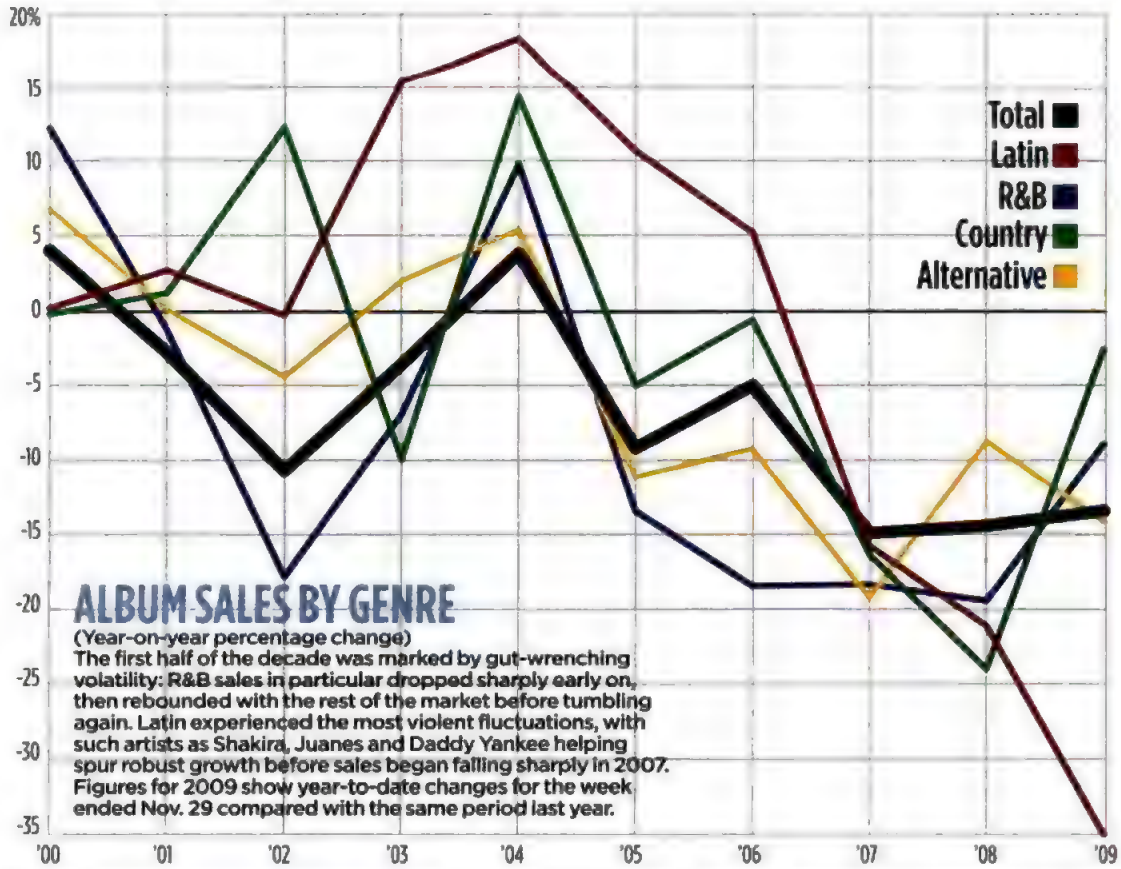
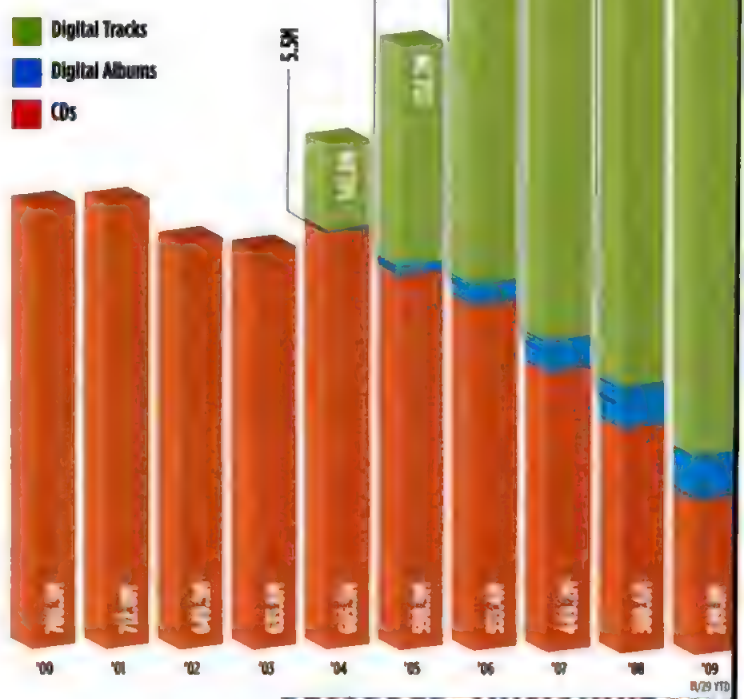
DISTRIBUTOR MARKET SHARE



Sony merged with (and eventually took over) BMG, but that didn't stop Universal Music Group from a dominant U.S. market position. Althoug this chart shows a decline for the indies, that sector would have grown from 16.3% in 2000 to 23.4% today if major-affiliated indies were included. The 2000 chart shows U.S. album sales, while the chart for 2009 includes track-equivalent album sales, where 10 digital tracks equal an album.

HIT TITLES BECOME SCARCER



As overall album sales plunged during the decade, the number of titles that could generate blockbuster unit sales of 2 million fell sharply from 32 in 2000 to just four in 2008, with only two titles reaching that sales milestone through the first 11 months of 2009. Tellingly, the number of albums to generate sales of 500,000 in 2008 was far short of the number of titles that sold 1 million in 2001.

ALBUM SALES BY GENRE

(Year-on-year percentage change)
The first half of the decade was marked by gut-wrenching volatility: R&B sales in particular dropped sharply early on, then rebounded with the rest of the market before tumbling again. Latin experienced the most violent fluctuations, with such artists as Shakira, Juanes and Daddy Yankee helping spur robust growth before sales began falling sharply in 2007. Figures for 2009 show year-to-date changes for the week ended Nov. 29 compared with the same period last year.

RECORDED-MUSIC UNIT SAL BY CONFIGURATI

The sales story of the decade centered on the accelerating plun in CD sales and the rapid growth in sales of digital tracks, w most of the latter dominated by just one retailer—Apple's iTu store. The much slower growth in sales of digital albu demonstrated that the digital market's primary appeal consumers is the ability to cherry-pick trac

Boyle Sets Swift Course In Year-End Charge

Susan Boyle and Andrea Bocelli team up for a second week to rule the top two slots, respectively, on the Billboard 200 as the former's "I Dreamed a Dream" retains the top slot with 527,000 sold (down only 25%), while the latter's "My Christmas" shifts 428,000 (up 97%).

Since Nielsen SoundScan began tracking sales in 1991, "Dream" becomes only the 16th album to sell more than 500,000 in each of its first two weeks, and the first to do so since 50 Cent's "The Massacre" in 2005 (1.1 million in its debut frame, followed by 771,000 in week No. 2).

And, with only a 25% decline in sales in its second week, "Dream" has the smallest sophomore-frame erosion for a No. 1-debuting album (released on a Monday or Tuesday) since Barry Manilow's "Greatest Songs of the Fifties" dropped just 9% in its second week after bowing at No. 1 with 157,000. "Fifties" was helped in its second stanza, as that was the week ending Feb. 12, so it included Valentine's Day shopping.

So, now after just two weeks of release, "Dream" is the 10th-biggest-selling album of the year with 1.2 million copies sold.

With four sales weeks left in the SoundScan tracking year, and with industry sources suggesting "Dream" will sell another 600,000 copies next week, Boyle may overtake Swift's sales figure by year's end.

This wouldn't be the first time a surprise fourth-quarter release rallies to overtake the assumed top seller of the year.

In 2007, Josh Groban's "Noel" was released 12 weeks before the end of the year and blew through 3.7 million in that span of time. Two weeks before the year was over, it had overtaken the soundtrack to "High School Musical 2" (3 million) to become the year's best seller.

Two years ago this week, in the frame that ended Dec. 9, 2007, "Noel" moved 582,000 copies and then scored 669,000 and 757,000 stanzas in the two successive weeks, respectively. All told, "Noel" earned four weeks of at least a half-million in sales.

"Noel" is still selling strongly, more than two years after its release. This week, it's No. 14 on the Billboard 200 with 63,000 (up 43%).

MIDDLE AGES: Andrea Bocelli's "My Christmas" album surpasses 1 million in total sales in its fifth week (1.1 million) and becomes his best-selling set since the release of "Amore" in 2006 (1.7 million).

Conventional wisdom indicates that with Christmas approaching, sales for "My Christmas" should increase as we inch closer to Dec. 25. Thus, "My Christmas" has a chance of approaching the total sales racked up by Bocelli's two best-selling sets: 1997's "Romanza" (4.2 million) and 1999's "Sogno" (2.5 million).

Seeing Bocelli and Susan Boyle at the top of the Billboard 200 with such big sales figures perhaps points to how the charts illustrate a divide among young and older consumers.

Boyle, 48, and Bocelli, 51, both likely attract much of their core audience from older fans—those who are still fond of the album configuration.

Conversely, the biggest-selling digital song from Boyle this week is the set's title track (17,000), and Bocelli's best is "What Child Is This" (No. 63 on Hot Digital Songs, with 20,000).

But I'm not quite sure it's as clear cut as saying older people buy albums and young people don't.

With Boyle, there's something that is resonating with consumers on a pure emotional level. They see a part of themselves in the rags-to-riches story of a middle-aged woman that stared down Simon Cowell in front of millions, surprising the world with her unexpected singing ability. Her fans are invested in Boyle's story, and they want a tangible piece of this cultural moment.

AND TO ALL . . . While this is the final printed issue of Billboard for 2009, don't fret—the charts department never sleeps. Our entire menu of charts will continue to be available weekly on Billboard.com and Billboard.biz.

Until we see you again in 2010, happy holidays!

Only seven albums released since SoundScan began powering the chart in May 1991 have notched at least 47 weeks in the top 10, and "Fearless" becomes one of them this week.

While other albums freefall in their second and third charting week, Bieber's debut is showing remarkable strength. In its second frame, it was down only 34%, and this week it falls 26%. To date, sales stand at 295,000.

His PBS special of the same name, which premiered during Thanksgiving week but continues to air, boosts the companion album (up 43%). The DVD of the TV special moves 25-22 on Top Music Video Sales.

This year's fourth-place finisher on "American Idol" bows with 32,000. With winner Kris Allen and runner-up Adam Lambert already on the chart, we await the arrival of third-placer Danny Gokey's debut on RCA Nashville in 2010.

Sale-priced at Target last week for $11.98, the set is up bull's-eye retailer also aids titles at Nos. 57 (up 94%) and 34 (up 57%).

125 The set's surprise Grammy Award nomination for album of the year, in addition to a $9.99 sale tag at Best Buy, help power its 36% increase to 10,000 copies and its best sales week since September.

177 The singer/actor, who would have turned 100 in June, returns to the chart for the first time since 1965. The set's "A Holly Jolly Christmas" falls from No. 1 to No. 2 on Holiday Songs this week (see page 180).

181 This isn't quite the Spanish-language equivalent of "My Christmas" (No. 2), but it's fairly close. On Top Latin Albums, it rises 3-2 with a 33% jump.

184 The singer's new hits compilation comes in two flavors: a nuts-and-bolts offering at No. 55 (22,000) and a double-length version here, with a much different tracklist (6,000).

What's the most popular Christmas song of all time? This week, "Silent Night" makes a case for itself as it appears on six of the top 10 sets on Top Holiday Albums (Nos. 1-3, 5, 6 and 9). However, the song doesn't have a definitive version, as it has appeared for only one week on the Hot Holiday Songs chart, in 2001, thanks to a rendition by Christina Aguilera.

The track by Jay-Z and Keys (pictured) has the biggest audience lead of the year on Hot 100 Airplay as 36.6 million impressions separate it from Beyoncé's "Sweet Dreams" at No. 2.

The group had two of the six titles to spend at least 10 weeks at No. 1 this decade. That's down from 10 double-digit No. 1 stays in the '90s.

12

She's the only artist this decade to have two albums—"Dangerously in Love" and "I Am . . . Sasha Fierce"—each produce four top 10 Hot 100 singles.

36

The Hot 100 Artist of the Decade spent a total of 126 weeks in the top 10 during the past 10 years, the only artist to reach triple digits. Beyoncé, with 74 weeks, was next in line.

63

The cast equals Lil Wayne for most charted tracks in 2009 with 21 and has a chance to surpass the rapper next week on the final chart of the calendar year.

DECADE NO. 1 TOTAL IS ALL-TIME LOW

With one week left until the close of the calendar year (according to Billboard chart dates), it appears that Jay-Z and Alicia Keys' "Empire State of Mind" will be the 129th and final song to top the Billboard Hot 100 this decade. Since a high of 253 No. 1s in the '70s, the decade tally of No. 1s has steadily declined. There were 231 songs that ruled the list in the '80s, and 140 climbed to the top in the '90s. The period from the chart's launch in August 1958 to 1969 produced 227 No. 1s. The drastic dip in No. 1s the past two decades can be tied to the increased accuracy of the Hot 100, courtesy of Nielsen-based monitored airplay and point-of-purchase sales data, which has formed the basis of the chart since 1991. —Silvio Pietroluongo

"Never Gonna Be Alone," the third format single from "Dark Horse," rises 11-10 on the latter chart to become the band's 10th top 10, tying the band with Goo Goo Dolls for most top 10s this decade. John Mayer follows with nine top 10s since 2000.

On Adult Contemporary, two new versions of "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" debut. Colbie Caillat enters at No. 23 with her rendition from "A Very Special Christmas 7." At No. 24, David Archuleta arrives with his styling from his "Christmas From the Heart" album.

Jumping 23-14 on Adult Contemporary, "Nutrocker" marks Trans-Siberian Orchestra's highest-charting hit at the format.

'WHITE' LIGHTNING

Miranda Lambert's fastest-rising single to date becomes her second top 10 on Hot Country Songs. Up 1.2 million impressions, "White Liar" steps 11-10 in its 16th chart week—that's lightning speed compared with her prior top 10, "Gunpowder & Lead," which needed 28 weeks to crack that part of the chart in July 2008. That song peaked at No. 7 on the Aug. 16, 2008, tally. Although her overall reception at country radio has been mixed, her retail track record is more consistent. Each of her three studio sets has opened at No. 1 on Top Country Albums, including her latest, "Revolution," which debuted atop the Oct. 17 chart. —Wade Jessen

NEW NO. 1s FOR KELLY, HOUSTON

Veteran artists celebrate No. 1s on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums and Adult R&B this week. R. Kelly earns his 11th chart-topper on Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums as "Untitled" shifts 114,000 units. With the exception of his debut album, "Born Into the 90's," in 1992, each of Kelly's studio albums have reached the top rung. "Untitled" also lands at No. 4 on the Billboard 200, his 11th top five on that list.

Whitney Houston leads Adult R&B for the first time in six years as "Million Dollar Bill" inches 2-1. The track is Houston's second single from "I Look to You" and her first No. 1 since "One of Those Days" in 2003. Her new album's title song peaked at No. 2 in October. "Million" interrupts Maxwell's No. 1 streak after 11 weeks, the longest for a male since 2007. —Raphael George

JUANES: STAR OF THE DECADE
